Mortgage rates rising again

By STEVE KERSTETTER

OTTAWA (CP) — Mortgage rates have begun to climb again, much to the dismay of home-buyers, housing contractors and some economic forecasters.

After coming down from their all-time highs in April, mortgages appear to have bottomed out and the going rate for a five-year, closed conventional mortgage has climbed back to as much as 14 per cent from 13 per cent or less.

In the U.S., interest rates on business loans and home mortgages are climbing again, and analysts say further increases are likely in the next several weeks.

The upward spiral was underscored Tuesday when Chase Manhattan Bank raised its prime rate a quarter of a per cent to 11.25 per cent and two major California mortgage lenders raised their rates to 13.5 per cent.

Wall Street analysts predicted other banks would soon join Chase and raise their rates from the prevailing 11-per-cent level.

In Canada it's anyone's guess what will happen to rates between now and the end of the year.

"If you talk to five economists, you get five different answers," says William W. Potter, executive vice-president of the Trust Companies Association of Canada.

While the experts may not agree on their forecasts, they agree on the reason for mortgage rates rebounding this summer: medium- and long-term money is simply more expensive to get.

Institutions such as trust companies and subsidiaries of chartered banks try to match the money they loan out in mortgages with the money they receive from investors buying five-year term deposits.

What's happened in the last two months is that it's been difficult for the institutions to attract these investors without paying them premium rates for their money.

Peter Carter, Royal Bank of Canada assistant general-manager of retail lending and mortgage services, says institutional investors and individuals alike have been reluctant to lock their money into longer-term investments because of a general feeling of uncertainty about the economy.

Carter says the yield on the most recent issue of five-year government of Canada bonds has risen to nearly 12 per cent within the last month, and trust companies and bank affiliates must go even higher than that to attract funds to lend out for mortgages.

The rate for five-year guaranteed investment certificates is running about 12.25 per cent. With an additional 1½ percentage points for operating expenses and profit — the minimum spread the lending institutions like to maintain — the rate for a five-year mortgage would be 13.75 per cent.

The institutions are also being squeezed by long-term deposits obtained last spring when interest rates were high. Even though interest rates generally have dropped, they must continue to pay high returns on those five-year deposits.

Duncan Baillie, vice-president and treasurer of Canada Trustco Mortgage Co., says many investors made their moves when the rates were peaking.

"March and April and most of May were gangbuster months," he says.

All this is little comfort to the person renewing his mortgage this fall or builders facing their worst slump in years.

Higher mortgage rates by definition mean higher monthly payments for consumers. The cost of paying off a $50,000 mortgage amortized over 25 years is $577.97 a month at a rate of 13.75 per cent. Last August, the rate was 11.75 per cent and the monthly payments on the same mortgage would have been $507.23.

Baillie says the demand for mortgage money from Canada Trust is less than it was 12 months ago.

"That's not to say it's dead," he adds. "We're still doing business, but it's not brisk."

The experience of the last year shows fairly conclusively that high interest rates can have a dramatic impact on housing construction.

Housing starts have been running at an annual rate of about 145,000 units. That's roughly three-quarters of last year's rate, and 1979 was certainly no banner year for the industry.

Migrants squeeze housing supply

The Canadian Press

Record migration to British Columbia in the first half of 1980 has created a combination of increased demand for housing in B.C. and continued tight rental markets in Vancouver and Victoria.

The migration will result in increases of between 10 and 15 per cent in house prices and rents for new accommodation this year, says the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corp.

Leading indicators of migration to B.C. such as transfers of family allowance accounts from other parts of Canada and job creation in the province, are sharply higher, meaning demand for housing will continue to grow, the corporation's July-August housing survey shows.

All factors taken together "point to a very buoyant housing market in many areas of the province in the coming months," said Richard McAlary, corporation regional economist.

Net transfers of family allowance accounts into B.C. set a record for the first half of 1980 — 1,857 families as of June 1, up 146 per cent from 1979.

"It would appear that the first half of 1980 will surpass the record-setting pace (of net family allowance accounts transfers) set in 1966 and the very strong first-half performance in 1974," McAlary said.

Metropolitan Vancouver has the highest absorption rate for new housing in Canada although it has the largest production of single detached housing, he said.

"The average amount of time a built-on-speculation, single-detached dwelling remains on the CMHC survey for metropolitan Vancouver is two months.

"The Canadian average for major metropolitan areas is 4.4 months."

A number of other statistics were cited.

Housing starts in B.C.'s urban areas fell 18 per cent, to 2,062 in July from 2,514 in June. But CMHC estimates that housing starts in 1980 will reach 33,000, up from the June estimate of 30,000.

Housing production in metropolitan Vancouver was flat in July.

Statistics Canada surveys show job creation in the Vancouver area was nearly 60,000 new jobs in the past 12 months, "a very strong historical performance and leading cause of housing demand pressure," McAlary said.

The 35,000 household formations estimated by the corporation for the past year, translates into a demand for 40,000 housing units in B.C. between mid-1979 and mid-1980. Since B.C. has about 30,000 housing starts in that period, there will be a pent-up demand for 10,000 units in the next 18 to 24 months.

Police carry away fan during riot at CNE when Alice Cooper failed to show

Angry rock fans go on 'flash riot'

TORONTO (CP) — One of Alice Cooper's most successful shows, Welcome to My Nightmare, turned into reality Tuesday night at the Canadian National Exhibition when the rock star failed to show up for a concert and fans went on the rampage.

"A flash riot," as one CNE official described it, broke out when the crowd of about 14,000 Cooper fans were told that their idol was ill and would not make an appearance.

Ambulance officials at the scene said there were about 10 injuries, the most serious being a broken ankle. One girl was treated after being hit on the head by a flying chair.

Even though it was announced that ticket money would be refunded and another band was available to play, part of the crowd stormed the stage while others threw chairs, bottles and other projectiles.

Police said about 30 people were charged, most booked for assaulting police. Other charges included mischief and causing a disturbance.

As one disgruntled fan put it: "Who wants to get money back? We want to see Cooper."

But they did not see him. Instead they saw a show that Howard Tate, head of CNE's public relations, said he had "never seen anything like in my 19 years with the Ex."

Toronto police announced today that the Canadian Rock Festival, a concert scheduled for tonight at the CNE grandstand, has been cancelled because of the riot.

A drum skin was broken and a few other wires were ripped out, but stage hands said no serious damage was done to the equipment. The outside of the stadium was more heavily damaged, as windows, turnstiles and pay phones took the brunt of the fans' displeasure. A van parked outside the stadium had its windshield and headlights smashed.

Neither Tate nor other officials at the CNE could estimate how much damage was done or how much money would be lost on the concert. The estimates will be compiled later today.

As police worked outside the stadium trying to disperse the crowd, crews were busy on the inside cleaning up the mess. Almost all of the portable chairs set up on the field were uprooted and the ground, usually centrefield for Toronto Blue Jays, was covered with bottles and parts of permanent stadium chairs, which were torn off.

Tate said CNE officials got the final word that Cooper would not appear at 10:10, and the announcement was made five minutes later.

Spokesmen for Cooper did not disclose the rock star's illness, but one stage hand said he was suffering from a high fever.

Tunnel out, bridge in

Science Minister Pat McGeer today rejected the concept of a tunnel under Georgia Strait to connect Vancouver Island with the Mainland and pinned his hopes on a floating bridge.

The minister based his decision on the last of four private consultants' reports on the fixed-link proposal.

Parsons-Brinckerhoff Inc., an international engineering consultant firm based in San Francisco, says a tunnel under the strait would be too expensive and a floating tunnel too unsafe.

Instead, it recommends a floating bridge that would span Georgia Strait with only one passage for large vessels. This would be situated in a man-made island about two kilometres in diameter.

The shipping lane would consist of a canal through the centre of this island.

While ships moved north and south through the canal, vehicle traffic would move east-west via a short tunnel through the seabed beneath the canal.

McGeer said this would be much safer than the submersible bridge section proposed as a shipping lane in an earlier study. It also would be much more expensive.

The price tag on the Parsons-Brinckerhoff concept is $3 billion to $4 billion, compared to the $2 billion estimate for the floating bridge proposal submitted by Willis, Cunliffe, Tait.

McGeer gives greater weight to the Parsons-Brinckerhoff study because the firm is actively involved in designing and building the new Hood Canal floating bridge.

Air crash toll rises to 301

JEDDAH, Saudi Arabia (Reuter) — The death toll from a fire which destroyed a Saudi Arabian jetliner at Riyadh airport rose to 301 Wednesday night with the discovery of more bodies in the charred shell of the aircraft, airport officials said.

This made it the second-worst-ever aviation disaster involving a single aircraft.

All the passengers and crew of the Lockheed L-1011 Tristar burned to death behind the jammed doors of the airliner Tuesday night after it made an emergency landing at Riyadh on a flight to Jeddah which began in Karachi, Pakistan.

Officials said the passengers were mostly Saudis and Pakistanis, but included three Britons living in

10 of 12 subcompacts fail crash test; death warning

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — U.S. government crash tests show that major safety improvements are necessary in small cars to prevent sharp increases in the highway death toll as Americans buy more sub-compacts to reduce fuel costs.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration reported Tuesday that only two of 12 models of 1980 subcompact cars passed its tests.

"Consumers need to know that when they switch to a small car to double the fuel economy, they may be doubling their risk of death in a crash — and that there are steps that can be taken to reduce the risk," said Joan Claybrook, administrator of the safety agency.

She was especially critical of Japanese models, and particularly cited two Toyota cars, the Tercel and the Celica, which she said would have to be redesigned structurally in order to pass the frontal crash test.

Japanese automakers "have just not put their attention" into strengthening vehicle structure, she said.

The NHTSA tested one domestic and 11 foreign car models by crashing them at 55 km/h into a fixed barrier with two dummies in the front seat wearing safety belts. A car failed the test when one of the test dummies was judged to have suffered a serious or fatal injury.

Only the Chevrolet Chevette, equipped with a three-point automatic belt system that encloses the occupant as he enters the car, and the Fiat Strada, which has conventional belts, passed the test. None of the highly popular Japanese models passed the tests.

The cars that failed the latest round of tests were the Honda Civic, Toyota Corolla, Toyota Tercel, Datsun 310, Subaru GLF and Honda Prelude, all mini-compacts weighing up to 2,150 pounds. Also

Change on helmets in works

An amendment to the Motor Vehicle Act to make use of motorcycle helmets mandatory in B.C. was introduced in the legislature Tuesday by Transport Minister Alex Fraser.

It's expected the amendment will become law within a week.

The amendment — which the NDP has agreed to support — will fix a section of the act which a provincial court judge ruled last week does not give the superintendent of motor vehicles authority to make helmet use mandatory.

Under the amendment, the section rejected by the judge will be replaced by one which states motorcyclists wear a safety helmet, but does not mention the superintendent.

U.S. dollar at banks this morning bought $1.16 Canadian, according to the Visitors Information Centre.

Oak Bay lots hit $85,000

Oak Bay Tuesday night auctioned 26 choice lots at $61,000 to $85,000 each to reap $1,865,500 for municipal coffers.

About 150 people took about two hours to buy up the serviced, single-family lots which are bounded by Foul Bay, Lansdowne and Henderson near Camosun College.

Ald. Peter Bunn, subdivision development committee chairman, said: "It was a million-dollar-an-hour clock tonight."

Most lots sold above their reserve prices, Bunn said. Lots were sold on a one-per-person basis.

The over-all profit to the municipality will be about $500,000. It was estimated earlier the profit would be between $300,000 and $500,000.

"We had to purchase and service the land, of course, and it looks as if it will be a profit to the municipality when everything is finished of about half a million dollars.

"The money goes into the municipal coffers, and will probably be put into short-term investments although it will be up to council to decide what to do with the money," Bunn said.

"In these times of instability, it's a good thing to have something in savings," he said.

Municipal administrator Jim Craven was the auctioneer.

One lot didn't sell and will be re-advertised at a later date on a sealed-bid basis.

It didn't sell, Bunn said, "because there were 26 other lots that were more desirable."

Kid kidnappers nabbed

SCOTCH PLAINS, N.J. (AP) — Five boys and one girl, ranging in age from 12 to 17, have been charged with kidnapping in the abduction of a 10-year-old boy who was held for $12,000 ransom, police say.

Lieut. John Powers said authorities were surprised by the age of those involved in the apparent conspiracy. "I've never seen anything like it in my career," Powers said.

The arrests came Tuesday after the parents of Thomas Beattie paid the ransom and were reunited with the boy, who was unharmed during his 18-hour ordeal. The $12,000 was later recovered from a car by detectives armed with a search warrant.

The boy was abducted Monday night while collecting money on his sister's newspaper route, Union County Prosecutor John Stamler said Tuesday. Patricia Beattie, 17, was not with her brother at the time.

The prosecutor, who said the boy was pushed into a car after he refused a ride, was held in an apartment and a garage in Plainfield with his hands and feet bound and his face covered with a ski mask.

Beattie was found sitting on the steps of the Netherwood Train Station in Plainfield by police, where a 15-year-old female and a 17-year-old male were apprehended, said Stamler.

Another 17-year-old boy was arrested in Plainfield about an hour later, said Sgt. Richard Berman of the Plainfield police department. And three other boys, aged 12, 13 and 17, were arrested later in the evening, officials said.

The names of the youths were not released because of their ages.

The suspects, who were being held in the county juvenile detention facility in Elizabeth, would be charged with robbery as well as kidnapping, the prosecutor said.

Polish gov't, strikers make headway in talks

GDANSK (AP) — The state radio said today government negotiators and representatives of some of Poland's tens of thousands of striking workers have reached a "common position" on strikers' demands.

The Gdansk radio report did not specify which of the demands were tentatively settled. It said 17 individual strike committees were involved in the talks, but it was unclear just how many of the workers were represented.

The report said the negotiators' agreement was passed on to higher levels of the Communist government, and the government's decisions would be presented to the workers later today.

"A common position was reached in demands concerning the work force in these enterprises," the radio report said.

An estimated 175 enterprises employing more than 100,000 workers have been idled since last Thursday by the strikes.

The negotiations are apparently part of a "divide-and-conquer" strategy in which the government negotiating commission asserted it would meet only with individual strike committees, not with an umbrella committee that sought to represent all the striking workers.

Jan Szydlak, chairman of the government-sponsored trade union organization, whose abolition has been among the unified strike committee's central demands, was party to the talks, the radio said.

Meanwhile, the Polish strike wave rippled briefly across the country to the steel mills in the south, but workers there were reported back on the job. Both government officials and dissident sources said many of the 40,000 workers walked off the job Tuesday at Nowa Huta, the showcase steel centre near Krakow, 480 kilometres south of Gdansk.

But they said the first shift came to work today because some sort of agreement was reached with the government.

In addition to millions of dollars in losses, the strike in the shipyards and elsewhere is expected to ruin production plans and delivery timetables and scare away much-sought Western customers.

The strike in Gdansk began Thursday at the giant V.I. Lenin Shipyard, the country's biggest, to protest the government's withdrawal on July 1 of subsidies that had kept the price of meat down. But in addition to higher wages to compensate, the strikers for the first time are demanding such major political reforms as trade unions free of Communist party control, access by religious groups to the mass media and an end to censorship.

Attitude to Clark unaltered

MONTREAL (CP) — Attitudes towards the leadership of Joe Clark haven't changed much in the last two months, a Gallup poll conducted late last month suggests.

About 39 per cent of Canadians questioned said they believe Clark is leading the Progressive Conservative party well, while 46 per cent said they feel he isn't doing a good job.

About 40 per cent of Canadians polled early in May felt positive about Clark's leadership, while the same per centage rejected his leadership then as did in the current poll.

Clark's support is strongest on the Prairies, where 53 per cent polled felt he was leading the Tories well, and weakest in Quebec,

Catholics plan to accept married Anglican priests

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Vatican-approved plan that allows married Anglican priests to become Roman Catholic priests, and remain married, was announced Wednesday by the United States Catholic Conference.

"It's very unusual, and yet there are some precedents," said conference spokesman Russell Shaw.

The announcement by Archbishop John Quinn of San Francisco, president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, said Anglicans in the United States will be able to seek a "common identity" in the Roman Catholic Church.

Shaw said the phrase "common identity" means the Anglicans can become Roman Catholics, but would be allowed to retain some of the traditions of their former church, particularly in the liturgy.

That "common identity," he said, also includes possible Roman Catholic acceptance of married Anglican priests as Roman Catholic priests.

Anglican priests who wished to join the Catholic Church would be reviewed on a case-by-case basis by the Vatican Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith. Such priests would not be allowed to become bishops and could not remarry in the case of widowhood, said the announcement from Quinn.

Catholic priests are not allowed to marry. The archbishop's announcement said this tradition will not change and that future candidates for priesthood will not be allowed to marry.

However, Shaw said, the rule does not preclude a person who married and became an Anglican priest in the future from later seeking to become a Roman Catholic priest and remaining married.

While the Anglican Church has some female priests, a conference spokesman said the Roman Catholic Church's ban on women priests is not affected by the new plan.

Quinn said the plan applies only to persons who, "while wishing to retain some elements of the Anglican tradition, fully accept Roman Catholic doctrine and the authority of the pope and bishops." He said the decision has been approved by Pope John Paul.

Shaw said he did not know what the response will be from Anglicans, but Quinn said he knew of 1,000 Episcopalians and 63 members of the Anglican clergy who actively favored the move.

U.S. tuna fishermen still barred

VANCOUVER (CP) — American fishermen have been refused permission to fish for tuna in Canadian waters while negotiators for both counties try to hammer out a last-minute tuna treaty, fisheries officials said Tuesday.

Individual U.S. fishermen, under the impression a treaty already has been reached, are asking Canadian officials for permission to fish for tuna in Canadian waters,

But a tentative settlement agreed upon by Canadian and U.S. officials several weeks ago is still mired in final negotiations in Washington, D.C. Canadian officials say no American boats will be allowed in Canadian waters until an agreement is reached.

Teachers consider strike over bill to limit pensions

The B.C. Teachers' Federation served notice Tuesday its members may strike this fall and later work to defeat the Social Credit government in the next provincial election.

The warning, delivered by federation president Al Blakey, followed legislative approval of a controversial bill to limit increases in teachers' pensions. Similar legislation to control benefits to retired B.C. civil servants was amended following a province-wide series of demonstrations earlier this summer.

"We've been shafted," Blakey said.

He declined to say what action the federation executive will recommend but predicted a formal announcement outlining a protest strategy is likely to come in September during the first week of school.

Bill 29, passed Tuesday, removes automatic quarterly indexing of teachers' pensions to the cost of living, starting next year.

It also requires teachers to pay an extra half of one per cent of salary to help cover a $550-million gap that has grown over the years between long-term pension benefit commitments and the ability to meet them. Government contributions are scheduled to rise by just over two per cent.

Blakey agreed the teachers' organization didn't work as hard as it could have to prevent the legislation from passing.

"Maybe that's a lesson," Blakey said. "It's one of the things we're discussing this week at our conference of local presidents. One of the things we are talking about is actions that might be possible or necessary."

If a teachers' strike occurs this fall it would be the first since a one-day stoppage in 1971, also over pensions. That stoppage arose in part from a controversy over inadequate retirement payments by the Social Credit government of W.A.C. Bennett, which had invested teacher pension funds in B.C. Hydro bonds at less than market rates of return.

Blakey tied the 1971 strike to the federation's formal campaign a year later to defeat the Social Credit government, which led to a level of involvement in a provincial election never seen before.

"The level of our political involvement in the next election will be commensurately more than it has been in the last two elections (1975 and 1979.) We haven't much choice."

Blakey said the federation's main demand is return of full quarterly indexing. Bill 29 is expected to limit future adjustments for inflation to a yearly maximum of about eight per cent.

A meeting between Provincial Secretary Evan Wolfe and federation officials last week failed to produce government concessions, Blakey said.

Vander Zalm alters municipal vote bill

Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm said Tuesday he will make changes to a controversial amendment to the B.C. Municipal Act that would allow a person to vote in his home municipality and another vote if he rents business space in a separate municipality.

NDP MLAs said the proposed new procedure opens the door to possible vote-loading against candidates with NDP backing.

Vander Zalm said he is not about to change the concept of allowing businessmen to vote in more than one municipality.

"Nobody has the right to two votes in the same municipality," he said. "It will still be one vote for one government and the amendments will make that completely clear."

He said the proposed change is similar to procedure now allowed in many U.S. cities through local initiative votes.

"We have the situation now that if a business block wanted to put flower pots along their block and pay for it themselves the business tenants who are in actual fact paying taxes through their rent would not have a say. And that is wrong.

"I can't tell you what the changes will be, only that we want to tighten up the amendments to the Municipal Act to allow business tenants a vote."

NDP critic Charles Barber earlier called the amendment disgusting and the NDP indicated it would not let the amendment pass without lengthy debate.

The NDP claims the amendment arises from Social Credit fears about a resolution passed at the last NDP convention which gave local constituency associations approval to get involved in municipal politics.

The amendment generated considerable opposition from municipal politicians who complained it violates the concept of one vote for one person.

One gaping hole

The Financial Administration Act proposed by the government this week is a piece of legislation long overdue.

Finance Minister Hugh Curtis has been sensible in introducing the act as a discussion paper instead of a full-blown bill to be passed by the House within a week or two. The subject matter of much of the bill is so technical and complicated that it will be well worth a few months of study by the ministries and Crown corporations affected.

Since her arrival, Auditor-General Erma Morrison has been recommending new legislation to strengthen the government's internal auditing procedures and financial controls. She has pointed out that existing financial control legislation is more than 70 years old and, despite repeated amendments, does not deal appropriately with many modern problems of government financing and accounting.

As the discussion paper states:

"For many aspects of financial administration, the exceptions are more common than the rules. Variations and inconsistencies occur both in financial procedures within the government itself and in the status and structure of separate organizations established to operate independently of the government."

The finance ministry, in developing the discussion paper, also found that a large number of existing acts provide for the government to pay the costs of various programs without yearly reference to the legislature. These blank cheques enshrined in legislation were designed to ensure that essential services would be provided no matter what the political situation, but they have gradually been expanded to include programs under such laws as the Fur Farm Act, the Scholarship Act and the Capital Commission Act. These can hardly be described as essential services.

The clean-up of these and similar anomalies should improve financial controls within government.

The government's intentions concerning the part of the act of most interest to the public are not made clear in the discussion paper, however. This is the part that deals with the amount of financial control to be exercised by the government over the affairs of "public bodies," a very loosely defined term.

The current proposal is for the government to implement extremely strict financial controls over all public bodies, but to allow the cabinet to exempt any or all of the bodies from any or all of the controls.

Until the government makes clear what its exemption policy would be, it is impossible to evaluate this part of the proposed legislation. The draft bill undoubtedly gives the cabinet the power to exercise excessive authority over some types of public bodies, if it wishes.

It could, for example, require all municipal councils to submit their budgets for provincial approval. It could exercise significant power over the affairs of self-governing professions such as lawyers, doctors and architects.

The finance ministry has said that this would not happen, that the cabinet would certainly issue exemptions to maintain the needed independence of other elected bodies and of bodies whose jobs require they be kept at arm's length from government.

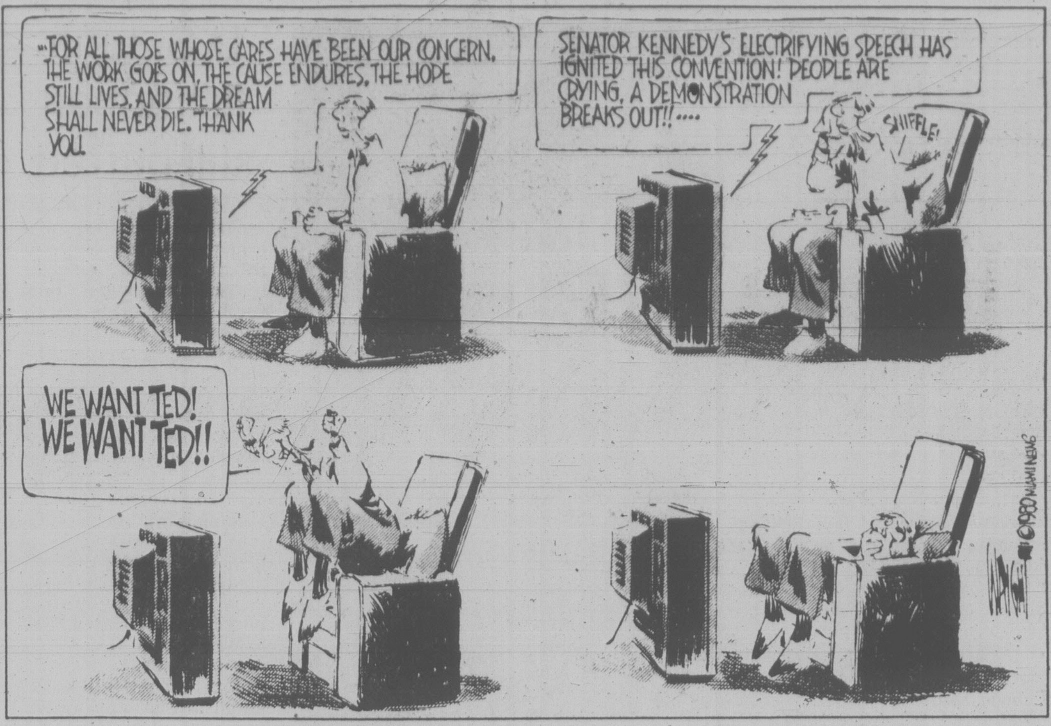
Until a proposed exemption policy is made public, however, the section dealing with public bodies remains the one gaping hole in an otherwise good proposal.

Headless riders

Opponents of motorcycle helmet laws argue that helmets increase the incidents of neck injuries, reduce peripheral vision, reduce hearing and increase fatigue, contributing to more accidents.

The B.C. Medical Association says that a California study of motorcyclists who received medical treatment reported a 50 per cent reduced risk of serious head injury with the use of helmets. Another American study shows that fatal or serious head injuries are three times greater for helmetless riders.

Considering that doctors believe that helmets do not contribute to or worsen neck and head injuries, that helmets reduce peripheral vision by only three per cent, that motorcyclists wearing helmets hear about as well as an automobile driver travelling with the windows rolled up, and that there is no evidence that helmets cause fatigue that leads to accidents, the provincial government is wise in attempting to get the helmet law back on the books quickly.



RICHARD GWYN

Feeding on primary dollars

SALVAGE, Newfoundland — Ellison Barsitt is a pretty mean hand at the wheel. He likes to bring his 40-foot longliner back in to harbor at top speed, and just when he seems about to crash into the wharf, to slam her into reverse and bring her to a shuddering, rocking, wallowing halt.

He's a pretty mean hand at words, as well. "The fishermen, the poor, the stupid fisherman," he told 62 longliner skippers and crewmen and sharemen and trap boat men gathered in St. Stephen's Hall, which at other times is used for church socials and suppers for the old folks and parties for the kids. "The dumb, stunned, fisherman, is the fellow who brings the dollars into the province. Everyone else just moves those dollars, our dollars, around."

Digging in

Once Barsitt has said his piece there wasn't much doubt that the men of Salvage would vote to go on strike for the first time in the 300 odd years the people had settled in this cove, kept out of Cowhead. "Don't give 'em nothing, not even a scale or a pail," said an old guy who talked while barely moving his lips, perhaps as a habit acquired to keep out Atlantic gales. "We've got to back up the boys around Newfoundland," said a young guy with the lean craggy look of an Elizabethan mariner.

A small affair. At peak of the season, perhaps 150,000 pounds of turbot and cod and small flounder and some sole, go over the wharf into the P. Janes plant here. Salvage's population is no more than 500, but growing, with 14 longliners where a half a dozen years ago there were just three, and with new houses, as is progress, but sheathed in aluminum siding instead of weathered clapboard so that they could have been parachuted down from Mississauga, as is the price of progress.

But this is also an affair the historians will look back at — one small part in the rising of the collective consciousness of Newfoundland's 20,000 inshore fishermen who have staged their first-ever general strike, to the amazement of the fishing companies and of the government and the public, and of much as to any of these of their own union which hadn't dared to call the strike but had it called by the fishermen themselves, in response to a company lockout, and in an extraordinary welling up of spontaneous anger in places like Salvage, and Old Perlican and Bonavista and St. Anthony, all around Newfoundland's shoreline.

And one issue, naturally enough is cash. The U.S. market had gone soft. The companies, pinched for profits are offering $10\frac{3}{4}$ cents a pound for turbot, compared to the $12\frac{1}{2}$ cents (including a two cent government subsidy the fishermen received in 1978). A better example: The price of cod to fishermen is stuck at the level of 1978, but the price to consumers has gone up by 30 per cent.

The issue behind the issue, a seaboard echo of what's happening in places like Windsor and Brantford and Chatham, as plants close or cut back is who should pay the price of hard times — the guys who actually bring in the dollars, or their employers, or the rest of the public which moves those dollars around.

In the past two years the fishing companies, like the auto companies, have enjoyed lush times. Now the times are hard, the fishermen like the auto workers, are being asked to pay the price.

So, while fishermen's union president, Richard Cashin talks about the price of fish, he talks as much about "a fundamental change in the system." By this he means a price stability fund, set by a levy on company profits during their lush years, nationalization of a large fish company, and full disclosure of the companies' (government-subsidized) books. Most of all, he damns as "a romantic elitism that will keep the fishermen forever in bondage," policy preference of Premier Brian Peckford for a large, part-time shore fishery, rather than a small, full-time one.

Since 1977, the year of the 200 mile limit, the landed value of Newfoundland's inshore catch has jumped by 80 per cent. At the same time though, the number of fishermen has increased by 60 per cent, only two thirds, "real fishermen"; about 6,000 are part-timers, moonlighting "townies" who pick up extra cash in their off hours.

The federal government has been trying to limit the number of fishermen by a progressively stricter licensing policy. Peckford wants to take over licensing from Ottawa and to apply a "looser policy". "Tight limits on the number of fishermen," he says, "would be wrong, socially and culturally."

In a society in which unemployment is 15 per cent, and which because of the legacy of the baby boom will stay that way for a decade, no matter how much oil is found offshore, the inshore fishery has functioned both as a social safety valve and as the mainstay of small outports. Laying out enough cod traps and lobster pots to qualify for "stamp" (unemployment insurance) was a way to fill in time between construction jobs or an alternative to leaving for Ontario, or, now, for Alberta. Also, it was part of every Newfoundlander's way of life.

This is the culture of the old Newfoundland. A new Newfoundland is being shaped by the force of economics. The traditional inshore fisherman, which is a 20-odd foot open trapboat could get by when prices were low because he had no overhead. The newer, "professional" paying off the interest on a longliner that is new and fully equipped, comes at $100,000.

No one expected the inshore fishermen to go on strike — because they never had before, because so many are "real fishermen" and because they're doing it at the peak of their short season.

Always struck

"They forgot we're always being struck against ourselves," Barsitt told me in his kitchen after the meeting, "by the weather, by the ice, last year by the whales, by gear failures, by no fish, so we got used to it, and have learned to get by."

Then he took me outside, and we stood on the black twine of the ring seine net fixing up to go off to mackerel and herring. "Also, they forgot we've got no choice but to strike. That net cost me more than my house. It's $24,000. Three years ago, it would have cost me $10,000. On this we get more for the fish, and I'm going under anyway. The system has to change."

As I realized listening to the meeting in St. Stephen's Hall and afterwards at the Barsitt's, the fundamental change already has happened. It's a psychic change. At last, Newfoundland's inshore fishermen have realized what they are — full-time professionals who bring in the primary dollars that everyone else feeds off of.

FLORA LEWIS

Workers challenge system

PARIS — The strikes in Poland are moving to a climax. So far, there has been perfect order on both sides. The government has refrained from any use of force and the workers have not rioted or looted or damaged property. It is an extraordinary situation. Anything can happen.

Whatever the outcome, it is now clear that the crisis will be another important milestone in the Communist world and, therefore, in East-West relations.

The significance of the confrontation was reflected in two items in the papers here. One was a wry little note about a premier telling strikers that the working class would suffer from their actions — an apparent reference to a six week-old strike of French fishermen that is blocking channel ports. But, it went on, this wasn't only in capitalist France, it is also happening in Communist Poland.

Striking Polish shipyard workers demand the right to bargain.

Deserve sympathy

And a French Communist wrote a long appeal in Le Monde asking support from his party for Polish workers, saying they are seeking no more than French workers demand and they have the same right to fraternal sympathy as Bolivian miners and Miami blacks. Of course, the Communist paper l'Humanite takes no such stand.

The issue goes to the core of the ideology. Strikes normally are not allowed in Communist countries, nor is collective bargaining, on the grounds that the workers own the means of production and cannot act against themselves. In theory, they are the masters and have no bosses to challenge since there are no capitalists.

The theory matters, even though it is not practised, because the whole Communist hierarchy bases its power on the claim of being the leadership and the only legitimate voice of the working class.

There is no other ground for legitimacy except the possession of force, and even that would be put into question if a Communist regime ordered the "people's army" and the "people's police" into action against a demonstratively authentic mass movement of the people.

The Polish regime is obliged to doubt how obedient its men under arms would be in such a case, and the use of Soviet troops would almost surely provoke armed resistance, however futile.

There are many levels to the impasse, many layers of cynicism and mistrust accreted over two generations. The director of Polish radio and TV, Maciej Szczepanski, a hard-liner and a man of critical importance in this deadlock between the regime and the ruled, provided an illuminating little example when I talked with him last month.

He spoke proudly of the number of production deals he had made with West European and American TV. One was for a series of Sherlock Holmes plays, and a copy of Baker Street has been built in Warsaw. The arrangement brings urgently needed hard currency.

Asked why the Western networks choose to film in Poland, he said the facilities were good, and after a pause, that of course they didn't face the kind of union and tax problems they have in the West.

Now, Polish workers are asking not only for more wages, and food in the shops to spend them on, but for the right to organize and to negotiate. In effect, they are telling the rulers to forget their fine theories and recognize the right to bargain.

The fact is that major groups of Poles have already seized these rights. This is unprecedented and astonishing in the circumstances. Their solidarity has grown from the factory floor, with spontaneous leadership.

Four years ago, after strikes that were quickly and bloodily suppressed in Radom, a small group mostly of intellectuals formed the Workers' Self-Defence Committee (KOR) to support those who were imprisoned and fired. Now, factory committees are sprouting in shop after shop, including the huge industrial complexes near the Baltic. They communicate with KOR so that suddenly there is coordination for what is becoming a vast movement.

That is obviously one reason the authorities have cut telephone and telex lines with Gdansk, where the biggest strikes are taking place. It is another mistake. Jacek Kuron, KOR's main spokesman, has been saying for weeks that the regime should seek to deal with the workers through organizations because nobody will be able to control them if their pent-up anger explodes unorganized.

Heed warning

He is a responsible man, a moderate and a patriot. Communist officials say they simply cannot accept free unions, but it is in everybody's interest that the Polish regime heed Kuron's warning.

If it does, and the chance for settlement has not already been lost, Poland may be able to overcome its crisis and develop a more reasonable form of socialism. That would be a historic example, with far-reaching effects.

If nothing is done until too late, there is likely to be violent upheaval, possibly Soviet intervention. It would be a tragedy not only for all directly concerned, but for what hopes remain of mending fractured East-West relations. Poland on top of Afghanistan would be too much. Washington, as well as Moscow, has a stake in how Polish workers are treated as they seek to carry out the old Marxist injunction to unite.

Get involved

The letter headed "Medical Alert" in a recent issue referred to a "threat" of pro-life members being elected to the Victoria General Hospital Board.

Given the choice, I personally would prefer a hospital to be guided by people who were pro-life rather than pro-death. A hospital is supposed to be a healing institution, and it is difficult to see how a person in favor of life can pose a threat to any patient of any hospital. There are, we are informed, pro life members on the boards of Powell River, North Vancouver, New Westminster and Langley hospitals. What dreadful things have resulted in these areas, where that terrifying "threat" has become a reality? Do tell!

The abovementioned letter also stated "Their (Pro-Life) philosophy is shared by only five per cent of the population." Against this unsupported assertion, I put forward the Badgley Committee report of 1976 — approximately 20 per cent favoured abortion on demand, the Gallup poll of 1978, which reduced this to 17 per cent, and the Weekend poll of 1979 which found only 10 per cent who felt abortion should be more easily available. On August 12, your own newspaper published a Toronto report showing lessened approval for abortions.

In view of this and other evidence indicating that the great majority of Victorians do not favor indiscriminate abortion, I too "urge (readers) to become involved in this matter, as the hospital belongs to all the people whom it serves, and should therefore reflect their opinions rather than that of a radical few".

Pick up a hospital society membership form now from the Victoria General Hospital — join before August 23 and you too can vote for a hospital which is dedicated to preserving life rather than acting as a centre for the disposal of the "unwanted". — Joan Hall-Patch, 2643 Cavendish Avenue.

Business vote

I am somewhat bemused by the antagonistic reaction to the government's recent announcement that they were restoring the business tenant's right to vote in civic elections.

It seems there is a fundamental confusion in the minds of many people over the structure and role of municipal and regional governments, and school boards, as compared with the structure and role of provincial and federal governments who operate under the British parliamentary system.

Civic government is the level of government which so directly affects everything about our day to day lives; questions of schooling, land use, traffic control and transit systems, street cleaning, sewer systems, parking meters. All these fundamental aspects of life in our community which impact so directly on us, are dealt with by civic government.

It is not unreasonable then that the person who is being asked to pay the costs of supporting this level of government, be given an opportunity to decide who shall establish the policies for that level of government. I believe that a "person" under the law can be either a firm or an individual. This same argument does not stand up in relation to the sphere of provincial and federal governments and there is simply no comparison that can be made to them.

The question remains whether a business tenant should have any less or any more say in selecting civic leaders than a residential tenant has. I would suggest, as a business man, that a business which has been operating in a community for 20 years and which provides employment for the people of that community, and which contributes to the tax base of that community through its rent, business taxes, and trade licences, should have at least the same rights as an individual renting an apartment or a basement suite who might have only been resident in that community for as little as three months.

The government has not given anyone two votes. What they have done is given a resident one vote in the community in which he lives and another vote on behalf of a business which he may own in a second community. This same right has applied to owners of land in the past and the government has seen fit to restore this right to business renters as well.

There is nothing illogical about what the government has done nor is there anything Machiavellian about it either. It simply recognizes the legitimate role of the business taxpayers to have an equal opportunity to express their view in civic elections.

I congratulate the government for their initiative and hope that businesses will support this initiative by exercising their prerogative at the appropriate time. — R. J. Wheaton, 1217 Wharf Street, Victoria.

Here we go again

and HUGH AYNESWORTH

(Bedell is a Dallas Times Herald staff writer. Hugh Aynesworth, a former newspaper and television reporter, witnessed the arrest and shooting of Lee Harvey Oswald and has reported on the assassination of John F. Kennedy for nearly 17 years.)

DALLAS — Jack Ruby and Lee Harvey Oswald were homosexual lovers who had a friend 12 inches tall who stood in a sewer to shoot John F. Kennedy.

The attack was extremely well executed and, to this day, the furtive planning sessions they held with the Red Guard and KGB, the CIA and FBI, Nikita Khrushchev, Sirhan Sirhan and militant Cuban exiles have never been fully uncovered.

If the secret Parkland Memorial Hospital room where Oswald and Kennedy are being kept alive on sophisticated life support systems could only be located, perhaps part of the mystery could be laid to rest.

It certainly wasn't laid to rest with the body in Fort Worth's Rose Hill Cemetery. That, as we have been told, belongs to a Russian impostor whose "overembalmed" remains, investigators will soon find, have been reduced to ashes.

We may never know who's "really" down there. We may never know the "real" story of the Death of a President.

That, at least, is what the authors of more than 300 books on various conspiracy theories would have you believe. In the 17 years since John F. Kennedy was assassinated in Dealey Plaza here, parades of the most unlikely and bizarre investigators have come forth with their own accounts of what was missed in the thousands of pages of the Warren Commission Report.

A second gunman, a third. Gunmen in the sewers, gunmen in trees. Three shots. Four, five, six. Manuscripts and kooks have streamed through publishing houses and talk show sets in an unending motorcade of the macabre.

The latest of the conspiracy boosters is an Englishman by the name of Michael Eddowes, who published his first work on the subject, Khrushchev Killed Kennedy, before ever venturing overseas. With his second expose, he has managed to create enough brouhaha over minor discrepancies in the autopsy reports and listings of Oswald's height to convince Oswald's wife that her late husband's body should be exhumed.

It is said that Oswald's widow, Marina Porter, simply wants to settle once and for all the question of the cadaver's true identity.

However, from a look at the past "revelations" concerning the Kennedy assassination, the opposite would seem more likely to occur: For every new revelation, another hundred questions emerge.

Take first the more serious transgressions of fact:

The origins of the so-called Grassy Knoll theory of a second gunman can be traced to the simple mistake of a Dallas Morning News reporter out for lunch with her cohorts to watch the motorcade on that Nov. 22 in 1963. When Kennedy was shot, she raced back to her office to file a tearful, horrified, account of what she had seen. Gunfire, she wrote, came over her right shoulder. The way she was facing, that would mean the shots would have come from the knoll, and when her friends saw the story they rushed to correct her. It came from the left, they said. And she admitted her mistake. The story was corrected for later editions.

In spite of affidavits to the contrary, attorney Mark Lane used the woman's uncorrected account of the shooting to bolster his assertion that another gunman was involved.

Armed with that and other varied accounts gathered in two days of research, Lane embarked in late 1963 on a fund-raising tour of Europe that resulted in the founding of "Who Killed Kennedy Committee" outposts in London, Denmark, Sweden and Poland.

It was a venture that would soon net him more that $2 million in dividends.

Lane then wrote an article entitled "Twenty-six Reasons Why Lee Harvey Oswald Wasn't Guilty" for a New York newsletter. From that, he expanded his work into a book, Rush to Judgment, which no fewer than 20 publishing houses refused to touch.

Until, that is, a doctoral student named Edward Epstein put out a purportedly scholarly paper questioning some investigation techniques used by the Warren Commission. The seeds of skepticism were planted. And Lane's ragged manuscipt turned quickly golden.

As the conspiracy thesis began making headlines and big bucks for Lane, housewives began forsaking sweepers, turkey farmers their flocks, attorneys their clients, just to pore over the Warren Report for any signs of cover-up. A turkey farmer did, in fact, publish one of the first Lane follow-ups entitled, Whitewash! The Report on the Warren Commission.

And with the publicity, all manner of witnesses claiming to have seen just about anything imaginable came forward with visions of fame in their hearts and dollar signs in their eyes.

S.M. Holland, a man in his 70s with lenses in his glasses as thick as the bottoms of soft drink bottles, got a lot of play. He said, and pictures verified, that he had watched the assassination from the railway overpass. He remembered, quite suddenly, that he had seen a wisp of smoke appear over the grassy knoll fence about the time Kennedy clutched his throat in agony.

Holland's poor eyesight aside, CBS-hired investigators were unable to reproduce anything even vaguely resembling a furl of smoke from any of the multitude of weapons they tested under a broad range of weather conditions.

Holland, by the way, first said he heard four shots; later, six.

Someone dug up the statements of a deputy constable named Seymour Weitzman, who told newsmen outside the book depository that fateful day that the assassin's rifle had been found. It was a Mauser, he said. His mistaken identification of Oswald's Mannlicher Carcano rifle served as fuel for postulations that a second gun had been located and its discovery covered up.

At the height of the hysteria, hundreds of still pictures were being scrupulously analyzed by conspiracy zealots. The Umbrella Man was discovered. Shadows were enhanced to disclose strange figures in the Dealey Plaza foliage and in the assassin's window at the Texas School Book Depository.

But nothing that preceded it could compare to the stories New Orleans District Attorney Jim Garrison elicited from a flock of bizarre witnesses he used in attempting to convict a 54-year-old businessman of conspiracy in the Kennedy murder. It was his contention during the 1967 trial of Clay Shaw that American and Cuban anti-Communists had conspired to have the president killed in retribution for the botched Bay of Pigs invasion and failure to pull down Fidel Castro.

With such conspiracy notables as Lane and comedian Mort Sahl at his side, Garrison marched through the courtroom a procession of witnesses bedevilled by pills and neuroses.

Garrison's two-year investigation turned up characters like the man they called Julius Caesar, who dressed in toga, sandals and spit-curls. He claimed to have known Ruby and his sister as dope pushers in Dallas but the story was later discredited.

The district attorney also turned up evidence that a second assassin had secreted himself inside a storm sewer during the motorcade. When he was informed that access to the sewer was a drain pipe only 12 inches in diameter, he responded, "Well, it was a very small man." Later, he scrapped that theory entirely.

LANE . . . millions

In the end, the seemingly precise testimony of a dapper accountant from New York City, Charlie Spiesel, nearly convicted Shaw. However, late in the trial, Spiesel admitted believing that Pinkerton detectives were disguising themselves as members of his family, causing him so much distress he become impotent. And, he said, he was so sure of that conspiracy that he made it a habit to fingerprint his daughter every time she visited.

"Well of course," he testified. "She disguises herself all the time."

And now, with Eddowes' Oswald-impostor theory, the nation enters a new chapter in the morbid search for a conspiracy. In light of the past history of this case, one has to wonder whether even a perfect match of Lee Harvey Oswald's medical and dental records would satisfy the questions of a cynical populace.

But one thing's for sure. It'll make a good book.

Mr. Williams is earning a reputation for liberal administration of law in the battle against crime. He has been leaning over backward to ensure that the accused always earn the maximum benefit of doubt, as of course they must.

But Mr. Williams does not approach his responsibilities lightly. He takes his time. He does not reach a conclusion without sleeping on it — many times. For eight months he tossed and turned with the difficult interpretation of a paragraph from the Elections Act under his pillow. In the case of the campaign funds.

Mr. Williams does make sure that the law is worded so tightly that a criminal cannot escape its net. Where the word is loose, there is no waste of the taxpayer's money or the resources of police and prosecutors in pursuing cases or hounding suspects. In the case of the campaign funds.

Mr. Williams is at pains to remove himself from the decision-making process if he believes an observer would think him politically influenced. He allows other people, preferably employees of the government and often people who work for him, in his own department, to assume responsibility. In all the cases mentioned above.

The attorney-general protects the public from having to hear unseemly outbursts or see grisly evidence during the investigations he allocates to his staff. He ensures that the public is not embarrassed, influenced, shocked, or even bored by public hearings, judicial inquiries, or court tests. In all the cases above.

But Mr. Williams is a defender of the principle of equality for all before the law, assuring that those suspected of influence are not falsely accused of exerting it. He will not allow himself or his deputies to be misled by zeal in the police when they recommend prosecution. In the Ritchie case.

Mr. Williams respects the integrity of judges as he does that of his fellow cabinet members. He believes in them and in their word. He does not let his employees become confused by allegations from lowlier mortals when they cannot be substantiated by Mr. Eckardt and Mrs. McCarthy. In the case of "Gracie's finger."

He is relentless in his pursuit of those who bear false witness against the people's representatives in letters to editors of newspapers and who sign names other than their own, even though the police are unable to track down these criminals. In the "dirty tricks" case.

He will not interfere in the proper business of political parties when less than pure suggestions are made about tape recordings and campaign strategy meetings, not letting the police get involved in these matters. As in the "dirty tricks" case.

Thanks to Mr. Williams, we can all sleep more soundly in the knowledge that no ill has been done, that no wrongdoers are at large, that our political process has not been violated, that our elected representatives are above suspicion, and that they got elected absolutely cleanly.

Mr. Williams is almost too good to be true.

A case of flexible gravity

Russell Baker

NEW YORK — Dear Professor Schlumberger:

Your thoughtful letter of three weeks ago has just reached my desk, having apparently been lost for a couple of weeks in the mails. We are often criticized for losing things in the mails, and, as behooves an alert government, we are doing something about that by raising the price of stamps. Reducing the number of persons using the mails should result in a corresponding reduction in the number of letters that get lost.

In this instance, however, you will surely agree that getting lost in the mail was the best thing that could have happened to your letter. The best thing for everybody. Had we received it three weeks ago, the president would probably have followed your advice, for, as one of our country's most brilliant economists, you are uniquely qualified to bend the presidential ear, and your proposal for ending inflation has the simplicity of genius.

"Since one of the causes of inflation is too much money" you wrote, "what if we closed down the Bureau of Printing and Engraving and laid off all the employees? There would soon be a shortage of dollar bills and, being in short supply, their value — as in the case of good French wines — would skyrocket."

There is no doubt that, had we done this, the dollar would have become so widely cherished that, as you suggested, Americans would have started building dollar cellars in their homes to preserve them in perfectly controlled temperature and humidity conditions and bringing them out only at dinners held to impress the most influential people.

Alas, Professor Schlumberger, conditions have changed since you mailed your proposal. At that time, inflation was the gravest problem facing America today and we were desperately trying to create a recession to solve the problem.

Now the gravest problem facing America today is the recession we created to solve the inflation problem. In consequence, we are desperately trying to undo all those things we did a few weeks ago to cause the recession.

Fortunately, thanks to the unreliability of the mail, one thing we do not have to do at this critical moment is re-hire all the employees of the Bureau of Printing & Engraving and resume production of dollar bills. I know you must be as relieved about this as we are, as you would certainly not like the present difficulty to be described in the press as "Schlumberger's recession"

Incidentially, in case you have not heard, the administration very much wants you to start buying on credit again. If you have credit cards, prepare to flash them now. Our Spring policy of attempting to make you turn in your credit card and live the frugal life is now inoperative. That is how rapidly things change here in Washington.

May I suggest that you use your credit cards to buy a cord of the latest books on economics? They are much cheaper than firewood these days and, what's more, few firewood salesmen accept credit cards.

Forgive me, Professor, but I was called away from my desk just now for a moment to cope with a new economic problem on which you may perhaps be able to offer guidance. In a nutshell, which is where I sometimes suspect I am working, it is this:

It seems that the gravest problem facing America today was, until recently, also been an unbalanced budget. It now appears, however, that Ronald Reagan is threatening our continued ability to lead the nation along sound economic paths. He raises this threat by making the public mouth water with the promise of a tax cut.

It seems clear, then, that the gravest problem facing America today is uncut taxes. As a foremost economist, you could contribute immensely to our re-election needs by divising a method under which we can solve the gravest problem facing America today by cutting taxes while also solving that other gravest problem facing America today by balancing the budget.

Forgive me again, but I am wanted in the Oval Office . . .

Well, Professor, back again with interesting news. It seems that the gravest problem facing America today is how to keep John Anderson off the ballot in industrial states with high unemployment.

While I realize this is not entirely the sort of problem a brilliant economist can be expected to solve, any suggestion you might have would certainly contribute in the long run to the nation's economic stability since it is hard to see how either Reagan or Anderson could lead to anything other than economic chaos.

In replying, be good enough to telephone so that we can start working right away to solve this gravest problem facing America today before we are compelled to forget it and come to grips with a new gravest problem facing America today.

Sincerely yours

New York Times

Bawlf defends rental condominium

Developer Sam Bawlf Tuesday defended before the city's Advisory Planning Commission the proposed use of his $8-million Wharf Street condominium for short-term rental accommodation.

He also asked for a change in the zoning of the property to prevent the luxury condominium from becoming a non-conforming use under the zoning bylaw.

Bawlf told the public meeting of the commission his condominium would be neither a hotel, nor a regular owner-occupied building.

Nor was it a time-share project, he said. Under a time-share or interval-occupancy arrangement, Bawlf said, each unit would be sold to a number of people, each of whom would own a specified time-share.

This wasn't the case with his scheme, he said. The 57 condominium suites had been sold to 50 individual investors who would either occupy the apartments themselves, or rent them to tourists on a weekly or monthly basis.

He explained that, according to his lawyers, nothing in the existing zoning bylaw prevented him from going through with that plan.

But he said the city is planning changes in the bylaw to regulate time-share occupancy. Those changes, he added, would make his building a non-conforming use within the Inner Harbor zone.

And that, in turn, would adversely affect the long-term profitability of his project, because the owner of a non-conforming building is prohibited by law from rebuilding the structure, in case it was destroyed by fire, Bawlf said.

"And it's not likely that 50 investors in an $8-million project would stand still for this approach by the city."

He rejected suggestions that the condominium would be a hotel. There would be no restaurant in the building, no daily maid service, and no rental on a nightly basis.

"To rent some of the largest apartments in the city on a nightly basis would be economic suicide," Bawlf said.

The concept of renting luxury apartments to tourists on a weekly or monthly basis, he said, is well-known in other parts of the world, including Hawaii, but is new to Victoria.

"Elsewhere, the number of units constructed for this type of accommodation outweighs conventional hotel rooms by four to one," Bawlf said.

He told the meeting his project would be a boon for Old Town. He estimated that visitors renting the apartments would spend about $1 million a year in Victoria, besides the rent.

The beneficiaries would be restaurants and shops, particularly in Old Town.

The planning commission will consider Bawlf's request for a zoning change at a closed meeting Thursday and make its recommendation to council in time for next week's meeting.

Beer gardens fine but not on Sunday

Beer in a stein is fine but on Sundays?

Nein, according to a recommendation from Victoria city council's parks committee.

Council previously allowed beer gardens on Sundays but the practice came to an end Tuesday.

The Fernwood Community Association had applied for permission to have a beer garden on Sunday, Aug. 31. The committee had no objections to the beer garden, but restricted its permission to the preceding Saturday.

"I don't think we're creating an undue hardship if we change the date by one day," said committee chairman Ald. Ken Sinclair.

The committee also endorsed his suggestion that council establish a policy of keeping Sunday free of beer gardens.

Broad ruins to go

A downtown building which had been earmarked for heritage designation will soon be torn down with Victoria city council's blessing.

Council's land use and zoning committee Tuesday approved an application for the demolition of the commercial building at 1218-1224 Broad recently destroyed by fire.

The building was on the city's list of potential commercial heritage buildings. Designation would have been triggered by any application for alterations or demolition of the building.

But the city's heritage bylaw rules out designation when more than 75 per cent of a building has been destroyed by fire.

2) DAILY FRENCH — with an expert.
3) DAILY SPORTS: small boys need lots of exercise — and if they return home at the end of the day happy, and pleasantly tired, their mothers will stay young longer.
4) BRIGHT COMPANY: every pupil entering St. Michaels University School takes an entrance test, and promising boys may enter Grade 1 aged five and a half.

Most important of all, boys admitted in Grade 1 gain a coveted place on the St. Michaels University School academic ladder. In many of the higher grades it is becoming harder each year, because of growing demand, to win a place at the School.

Bureaucrats buck 'open' planning proposal

Municipal Affairs Minister William Vander Zalm — faced with mounting opposition from some of his cabinet colleagues — said Tuesday his proposed Land Use Act designed to change the face of planning throughout the province will now be widely published and distributed.

The aim: To get feedback from municipal, regional district and other interested parties before being reintroduced next year as legislation.

No date has been set for the general distribution of the land use "green paper," but it is believed Vander Zalm will use the annual convention of the Union of B.C. Municipalities in Prince George this September as his launching platform.

He said he is philosophical about resistance to his planning proposals from cabinet colleagues.

"I'm confident it will be brought back next year with very few changes," he said. "I think once people get a look at it, they will support it."

The land use plan calls for establishment of seven economic planning zones throughout the province.

Basically, Vander Zalm's Act would force provincial ministries, municipalities and crown corporations to publish short and long term planning proposals to enable broad-brush planning for the seven economic regions.

Hardest hit under those changes would be crown corporations such as B.C. Hydro and ministries such as highways, both of which tend to plan in secret and without too much consultation, or no consultation, with local governments.

Regional districts would also have had their planning powers severely curbed with the economic region becoming paramount in over-all planning.

Organizations such as the executive of the UBCM, the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada (HUDAC) the Urban Development Institute and agricultural organizations favored Vander Zalm's general proposals after being briefed on them in camera.

But the Hydro lobby, key public servants and several cabinet ministers, all balked at the sweeping changes.

Vander Zalm would not name the ministers opposed to his proposals, but it is understood that the group includes Energy Minister Robert McClelland, Highways Minister Alex Fraser, Attorney-General Allan Williams and Consumer Affairs Minister Jim Nielsen.

Nielsen was the only one to admit that he had objections to the proposed act, but said they were confined to his feelings that municipalities must have autonomy over all of their planning functions and not be dictated to by outside groups.

"He can say what he likes," one senior public servant said. "But the objections are basically to the proposal that people like Hydro be forced to open up their short and long range plans for everyone to see.

"There are enough bureaucrats around to recognize that move as an encroachment on their little empires and they are going to fight hard, and seem to have some ministers fighting hard for them, to make sure their empires hold together.

"Some of them are very nervous about public disclosure of planning proposals. They don't enjoy having to answer questions in public."

Vander Zalm's legislation, billed as the answer to many of the planning problems now bringing regional districts and individual municipalities into confrontation situations, was eight months in preparation and ran to 125 pages.

When it reaches the public in its new form, it is expected to remain virtually unchanged from the original bill.

Between September and the next session of the legislature, Vander Zalm said he expects to win solid public support for his proposals, particularly its freedom of information sections.

Uranium limits revealed

A proposal by Placer Development Ltd. for a molybdenum mine near Atlin in northwestern B.C. likely will proceed because it falls within uranium mining regulations being considered by the provincial cabinet, Energy Minister Bob McClelland said Tuesday.

McClelland revealed draft regulations setting out threshhold levels of uranium permitted in an ore body during clause by clause reading of the Mines Act.

"It is my understanding that the mine in Atlin does fall within guidelines and will be allowed in that regard," he said.

The Placer property contains trace quantities of uranium. Local residents say a molybdenum mine would cause a problem because of radioactive tailings.

In an unusual move — apparently made to answer charges that the government might be relaxing its seven-year moratorium on uranium exploration and development — McClelland said he would table the draft regulations in the house.

Under the regulations, no exploration will be allowed if uranium exceeding .5 kilograms for every tonne of mineral in an ore body is discovered. And a mine owner must cease production if, in the course of producing mineral ore, the ore body is found to contain more than .01-per-cent uranium by weight.

In both cases, owners must report those findings to the chief mines inspector within seven days.

NDP mines critic Chris D'Arc1 (Rossland-Trail) said he was concerned threshhold levels were set out in regulation and not in the act where they could be debated in the legislature.

He opposed the fact that cabinet could change the regulation at whim.

Rising deaths seen in subcompacts

failing were the Volkswagen Rabbit convertible, Audi 4000, Mazda 626, and Datsun 300 SX, all subcompacts weighing between 2,151 and 2,650 pounds.

In agency tests released last February, involving mostly 1979 models, only three of nine models passed — the Chevrolet Citation, Plymouth Horizon and Ford Mustang.

The cars that failed the earlier tests were the Datsun 210, Ford Fiesta, Plymouth Champ, VW Rabbit hardtop, Toyota Celica and Mercury Bobcat. All 1979 models tested except for the Toyota Celica are essentially the same in structure in 1980, NHTSA said.

Agency investigators analyzed the test failures and concluded that in many cases, the cars' safety performance could be upgraded substantially at low cost — $5 to $15 — by modifying restraint systems or steering columns.

Twenty-seven thousand passenger car occupants were killed in U.S. accidents in 1979, and the agency estimates the number will jump to 42,000 by 1990 unless small-car safety is improved.

Small cars comprised 38 percent of cars on the road in 1979, but their occupants accounted for 55 percent of the deaths in two-car collisions, Ms. Claybrook said. Small cars are expected to comprise 50 percent of the U.S. car population by the mid-1980s, Ms. Claybrook said.

The most effective remedy available is automatic restraints.

"Unless smaller cars are equipped with automatic protection, such as airbags or automatic belts, the highway death toll will increase," she said.

Driver of Mustang, right, would have survived. In Celica, left, he would have died

Tristar blaze kills all 301

Saudi Arabia. The 16 crew included six Filipinos, three Pakistanis and a British stewardess.

Earlier estimates from passenger lists had put the death toll at 265.

The worst single-plane disaster was in 1974 when a Turkish Airlines DC-10 jetliner crashed outside Paris killing all 346 people aboard.

The American Airlines DC-10 crash at Chicago's O'Hare airport in May last year killed 271 people.

The world's worst airline disaster occurred in 1977 on the Canary island of Tenerife when Pan Am and KLM Boeing 747 jumbo jets collided on the ground, killing 582.

The Tristar pilot turned back 130 kilometres out of Riyadh on Tuesday night after smoke began billowing in the cockpit and made a successful emergency landing — but rescuers could not get the doors open.

Officials of the Saudi airline Saudia and the country's aviation agency joined international experts in an inquiry into the cause of the blaze, Saudi officials said.

The Tristar had just taken off from Riyadh for Jeddah when it turned back.

As he landed again the pilot said in a last radio message that he was going to evacuate the passengers down the escape chutes — but the flames spread too quickly, Saudi officials said.

Don't become 'fussed'

Realtor surprised more foreigners aren't buying up B.C. land because of the low rate of the Canadian dollar

A past president of the Canadian Real Estate Association said Tuesday he's surprised more foreign buyers aren't purchasing B.C. land with the Canadian dollar at its present low level.

"B.C. land is an excellent investment," Pip Holmes of Victoria said.

He said, however, if too much land is being taken up by foreigners, restrictions might be considered against non-Canadian purchasers.

Holmes was commenting after provincial district agriculturalist Brian Harper said in Dawson Creek that about 25 per cent of usable farmland in the Peace River area is owned by people in Germany, the U.S., France and the U.K.

Harper was concerned about the effects on food production when prime land was held by absentee owners.

Holmes said fears that foreigners will buy all of B.C.'s best land are not new but at present the main buyers are Albertans and other Canadians.

"And when we begin to consider fellow Canadians as foreigners we are all in trouble."

Holmes, past president of the Canadian and world real estate federations, said there must be limits to foreign ownership of land, especially farms.

"But this is a big province and the situation has not reached a level where we should become unduly fussed. If you want to raise a political storm you can get fussed about any amount of foreign ownership."

Holmes said foreign ownership in the Peace River area must be watched but does not yet appear to be a serious problem.

Meanwhile, on Vancouver Island and in the Gulf Islands the amount of American ownership has declined during the past 10 years.

"Canadians have shown an increasing interest in buying land here. Many of these buyers have come from Alberta — and this worries some people."

Holmes said it must be a prime right of citizenship to buy land anywhere in one's own country.

Any attempt to halt sales to Albertans would naturally result in similar restrictions on British Columbians. The sense of being a Canadian would be diminished.

There is a trend towards provincial land restrictions and it must be resisted, he said.

Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick have brought in controls and there is a prohibition against non-residents from owning farm land in Saskatchewan.

Holmes urged the provincial government to resist this type of legislation.

He asked the government to establish a monitoring system to assure the amount of foreign ownership of B.C. land does not reach unacceptable limits.

With computers, he said, it should be a simple matter to label each piece of land by ownership, whether Canadian or foreign. A simple check of the computer would show when a problem might be arising in some area.

The concerns, he said, should be in the areas of farmland and waterfront that might have strategic value.

"But I am less concerned about the military aspects of waterfront that I was in the past. The federal government has the power to expropriate land in an emergency and they can do it faster than you can blink an eye.

"We have little to worry about in this regard."

Holmes agreed there could be a serious problem if the land is banked for future profit and not used for food production.

"A situation like that must be watched carefully."

He said food production must be responsive to Canadian needs and federal government policy.

$871,143 for outfall in Oak Bay

After more than seven years of controversy, the way appears clear for a replacement for the McMicking Point outfall in Oak Bay.

As Mayor Doug Watts said Tuesday: "The news is good, all signals are go."

Watts made the comment after he and other members of Oak Bay council attended a special meeting of the Capital Regional District's solid waste management and sewage disposal committee.

The committee voted to recommend acceptance of the Dillingham Corporation Canada Ltd. (North Vancouver) bid of $871,143 to build the 720-foot outfall from the adjacent Kitty Islet.

The committee's decision is expected to be ratified at the regional board's Sept. 10 meeting.

Oak Bay Ald. Susan Brice said she had been against the new outfall but said the bid was so incredibly low it would fit into a long-term plan.

Ray LeNoury, of the consultant firm of Willis Cunliffe Tait and Co. Ltd., said the North Vancouver company has successfully built similar outfalls for MacMillan Bloedel and Crown Zellerbach as well as the Nanaimo Regional District's French Creek outfall.

The company's bid was the lowest of six.

LeNoury said the reason is the company has its own drydock and yard, as well as a crane barge and other equipment needed to carry out the project.

LeNoury said the outfall should be in place next June and assured council and committee members the McMicking Point outfall will continue to be used until the communitor station — which will chop sewage into small sections — is in operation.

Watts asked if the station could be built at the same time as the new outfall so raw sewage will not be dumped.

LeNoury said tenders could be called so the station could be built as soon as the outfall is in place.

He said a small amount of blasting will be necessary and care will have to be taken to protect the McMicking Point outfall, which is 60 to 70 years old.

The entire project, including $299,380 for consultant fees and $90,000 for pipe, will cost $1,460,523 when completed.

Oak Bay's share will be 38 per cent, Saanich eight per cent and the city of Victoria the remainder.

Drive launched for new shelter

The Good Shepherd Shelter Foundation has launched a fund-raising drive to build a new animal shelter at its Mill Bay site.

Lottery tickets went on sale this week and the foundation plans a baking and book sale and fund-raising luncheon.

Shelter manager Sister Julia says the foundation is asking for construction bids for a three-acre building at the far end of its 58½-acre property beside the Trans-Canada Highway about five kilometres south of Mill Bay.

The cost is expected to be about half a million dollars.

The new kennel would replace the 15 existing antiquated buildings and would house about 400 dogs and 50 cats.

The project has yet to be submitted to the Cowichan Valley Regional District.

Gov't action by Sept. 15 asked on ship

By AL FORREST

The provincial government has until Sept. 15 to come up with a suitable replacement for the Princess Marguerite or the city will lose out on package tour business for the second consecutive year, Visitors Information Centre president Les Wood said today.

"If they miss the deadline we won't be able to get the word out in time and the package tours will go elsewhere."

Wood said agencies plan nine months in advance and they will be making their 1981 destination decisions within a month.

Failure of the government to give advance information on the 1980 replacement for the Marguerite was the major factor in the loss of package tour revenues this year.

The Marguerite was taken out of service in the fall of 1979 and her replacement, the smaller Queen of Prince Rupert (renamed the Victoria Princess), was not selected for the run until spring.

Transport Minister Alex Fraser is studying several vessels for the 1981 season, including the Marguerite. She would require extensive renovations if she came out of retirement.

Wood said an early decision is essential. The timing is as important as what vessel is selected.

This spring the hassle over the Rupert was only one factor in a year of problems.

"Almost anything that could go wrong did. But we survived it all one way or another and now we are making some gains," Wood said.

During July revenues of tourist attractions ranged from even with 1979 levels to down seven per cent.

"In August the range is from level to higher than last August."

The outlook for September is promising.

Wood said it is amazing the capital city's economy is doing as well as it is, considering the way the year began.

Problems included the volcano, a U.S. recession, unusually wet weather, loss of the package tour business, and uncertainties over the Rupert.

"It's a long list."

But merchants are beginning to smile a little now, if a bit cautiously.

On Tuesday night all hotels and motels in the region were full and 50 people had to be put up in 20 private homes as part of the VIC's overflow housing program.

Ferry traffic up slightly

Traffic on B.C. Ferries was up in July, but only marginally, the corporation said today.

There were 683,570 passengers carried between Swartz Bay and Tsawwassen, up 3.5 per cent from last July. There were 188,679 vehicles carried, up 3.8 per cent.

On the Nanaimo-Horseshoe Bay run there were 436,398 passengers, up 2.2 per cent, and 157,708 vehicles, up 3.1 per cent.

With a strike of the CP freight ferry, commercial traffic on the government service increased in July. It was up 27 per cent at Swartz Bay and 11.7 per cent at Nanaimo.

Recreation vehicles increased 6.6 per cent at Swartz Bay and 3.2 per cent at Nanaimo.

In the whole system, B.C. Ferries carried 1.6 million passengers in July, up 3.9 per cent, plus 547,762 vehicles, up 6.2 per cent.

$3 million outlay proposed on parks

The Capital Regional District should spend up to $3 million over the next five years to develop and improve its parks system, the regional parks committee was told Tuesday.

Brian Johnston, of Professional Environment Recreation Consultants Ltd. of Surrey, told directors about one third of that amount is obtainable from provincial grants and other sources.

In a list of priorities, Johnston recommended:

— A mechanical workshop and equipment shelter be constructed at the Mill Hill service yard.

— A maintenance shop for service parks on the Saanich Peninsula be built at Elk Lake.

— A storage building for equipment at Mount Work.

— A greenhouse at Mill Hill.

— Upgrading of existing major trails.

— Repairs to five park residences.

— A wide range of parking lot improvements.

— Upgrading of the Beaver Lake soccer field.

— Development of high-quality ball fields.

— Picnic shelters for Beaver Lake and Aylard Farm in East Sooke Park as well as at Tower point in Witty's Lagoon and Hamsterly Park.

— Fire pits for wilderness camping in East Sooke Park.

— A clubhouse at Beaver and Elk Lakes for the rowing, retriever and riding clubs, as well as a cross-country running track and some informal ball diamonds.

Also recommended were improvements to pit toilets and installation of water where possible and construction of change rooms at Mount Work and Aylard Farm.

Johnston said a new conveyor for the CRD's weed harvester is needed, as well as other equipment like a backhoe, 2½-ton truck, tractor, side-arm brush cutter, gang mowers and mobile radios.

The committee will also recommend the CRD increase its tax levy for parks by another quarter of a mill — the levy is now half a mill — and have a development costs charge bylaw prepared to assist in park acquisition.

Child law falls short: social workers

While many provisions of the government's proposed Family and Child Services Act are needed and welcome, the B.C. Association of Social Workers feels the legislation falls short in many critical areas.

After studying Bill 45, the association said it welcomes the extension of protective coverage to children under 19, the elimination of provisions that make unmanageability an offence and the setting of time limits for the start of judicial proceedings to determine a child's need for protection.

The association says the act is a protection act only and nowhere provides for the legal responsibility of the government to develop and provide services aimed at supporting and strengthening families.

The association feels such services as day care, homemaking, services for the handicapped and special education services should be spelled out.

The bill makes no mention of developing citizens groups or councils to identify needed services and to monitor services provided.

The BCASW fears enactment of the legislation could eliminate existing lay panels to assist judges in hearings.

Lay panels should be included in future forms of the legislation, the association maintains.

Here's a cheaper coulibiac

craig claiborne

Some time ago I delivered myself of the notion that the greatest dish in the world was an elaborately made and irresistible dish called a coulibiac of salmon. I explained that the dish is often described in food dictionaries as a pate of salmon. I added that such a definition was woefully inept:

"It is no mere trifle, no ordinary pate, something to be dabbled with while awaiting a second course or a third or fourth. A coulibiac is a celestial creation, manna for the culinary gods and a main course unto itself."

Pierre Franey and I then offered a classic version of the dish, which consists of an outside pastry made of brioche dough, a lining of French crepes and a filling of cooked fresh salmon blended not only with rice, hard-cooked eggs and dill, mushrooms and white wine but also vesiga, an available but hard-to-find spinal marrow of sturgeon.

Soon after this fantasy, a letter arrived from Jack Kaplan, who offered his abbreviated — infinitely less costly — version of the dish. His conception included a standard, easily made cream cheese pastry to replace the brioche. He used canned salmon (of course, he added, you could use fresh salmon without apology).

A short while ago, Pierre Franey undertook to reproduce Kaplan's coulibiac, and it was a wholly admirable dish, a creation we would willingly serve guests when we felt in a budgetary state of mind. It is our guess that this streamlined version of the dish (made with canned salmon) would cost approximately one-fifth that of the classic creation. Here is our adaptation of Jack Kaplan's coulibiac:

COULIBIAC OF SALMON

1 recipe for cream cheese pastry (see recipe)
2 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons finely chopped shallots
1 cup finely chopped onion
¼ pound thinly sliced mushrooms, about 2 cups
2 tablespoons flour
½ cup dry white wine
½ cup milk
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
Tabasco sauce to taste
1 egg yolk
4 tablespoons finely chopped dill
2 cups fresh or canned coarsely flaked salmon
2 cups freshly cooked rice
2 hard-cooked eggs
1 raw whole egg
2 tablespoons water
Melted butter.

1. Prepare the pastry and refrigerate.

2. Melt the butter in a saucepan and add the shallots and onion. Cook, stirring, until wilted. Add the mushrooms and cook until mushrooms are wilted.

3. Sprinkle with flour and stir.

4. Add the wine, milk, salt, pepper and a dash of Tabasco, stirring rapidly with a whisk. Continue cooking about five minutes.

5. Remove from the heat. Add the egg yolk, beating briskly until blended. Add two tablespoons of the dill.

6. If canned salmon is used, be sure to remove and discard all the soft skin and the soft bones.

7. Put the salmon in one layer in a flat dish measuring about eight by fourteen by two inches. Spoon and scrape the dill sauce over it. Butter a rectangle of wax paper. Invert the buttered side down over the sauce. Let cool. Refrigerate for an hour. The sauce will become firm.

8. Put the rice in a bowl. Push the hard-cooked eggs through a fine sieve over the rice. Add the remaining two tablespoons of chopped dill. Blend well.

9. Preheat the oven to 375 degrees.

10. Lightly flour a smooth flat surface, preferably marble. Roll the dough into a rectangle measuring roughly 14 by 19 inches.

11. Spoon about one-quarter of the rice over the center of the pastry.

12. Cut the chilled salmon mixture in half lengthwise. Lift up half of the salmon mixture and invert it over the rice, salmon side up.

13. Spoon another quarter of the rice over the salmon. Top this with the remaining salmon-sauce, salmon side up. Cover this top and the sides with the remaining rice.

14. Beat the raw egg with the water.

15. Bring up one side of the pastry to partly cover the filling. Brush the top of this pastry with the egg yolk. Bring up the opposite side of the pastry to cover the first portion. Brush with egg yolk.

16. Bring up the ends of the pastry so that the filling is neatly enclosed. Trim off excess pieces of pastry. These may be rolled out and used for decorating the loaf.

17. Turn the loaf over, seam side down onto a baking sheet. Brush it all over with egg yolk. Cut a small hole, about three-quarters of an inch in diameter, in the top center of the pastry. This will allow steam to escape.

18. Place the loaf in the oven and bake 45 minutes or until the coulibiac is piping hot throughout and golden brown all over. Serve sliced with melted butter spooned over.

Yield: 6 to 8 servings.

CREAM CHEESE PASTRY

½ pound cream cheese at room temperature
½ pound sweet butter at room temperature
Salt to taste
1 egg yolk
2 cups flour.

1. Put the cream cheese, butter and salt into the container of an electric mixer. Blend well. Add the egg yolk and blend thoroughly.

2. Spoon and scrape the mixture into a mixing bowl and add the flour. Work the mixture by hand to form a dough. Coat the dough with flour and chill until ready to roll out.

Yield: 1½ pounds of pastry.

RICE

1 tablespoon butter
2 tablespoons finely chopped onion
¾ cup raw rice
1¼ cups chicken broth
2 sprigs fresh parsley.

1. Melt the butter in a saucepan and add the onion. Cook, stirring, until wilted.

2. Add the rice and stir. Add the broth and parsley and stir. Bring to the boil and cover closely. Let simmer exactly 17 minutes. Uncover and stir. Let cool and remove parsley sprigs.

Yield: About 2 cups.

Before any long trip, check for all insurance benefits you are entitled to should you have an accident far from home. You probably have three types of insurance protection: private, employment and auto club. You might also learn that you have duplicated some benefits. Such as reimbursement for towing your car or the expenses for car rental, lodging, food.

Hot weather keeps auto mechanics busy repairing overheated engines, recharging dead batteries and replacing blown out tires. To prevent the problems, a mechanic advises replacing worn engine hoses (which are more likely to break in summer heat) checking battery water often (it evaporates quickly in high temperatures) and watching tire pressure, which can increase 10 pounds in heat.

A new chapter in The Plouffe Family began this week in Montreal with the filming of a $5-million movie version of Roger Lemelin's novel about a large Quebec family during the Second World War. As a homey, kitchen-sink drama, The Plouffe Family was a long-running 1950s TV hit. The movie, produced by International Cinema Corp. in association with the CBC's French network, will be released next spring in a two-hour and a five-hour version.

Actress Mariette Hartley said she turned down a chance to take Jane Pauley's job as co-host of a U.S. network morning show, because of hostility from the show's staff. "I felt like I was in enemy camp," Miss Hartley said, after filling in as the show's co-host for three weeks. Show producer Steve Friedman explained: "Jane has many friends and fans and there was some resentment."

Three years after his death, rock'n'roll singer Elvis Presley is still a big draw. More than 20,000 people filed past his Memphis, Tenn., grave over the weekend to mark the anniversary of his death. The driveway to Graceland Mansion, the Presley estate, was flanked by wreaths — some shaped like hearts and guitars — from fans all over the world. Presley was buried at the estate after his death Aug. 16, 1977.

New York author Clifford Irving says poor planning doomed his Howard Hughes autobiography hoax nine years ago. "It was inventive and clever, but unfortunately it was not the product of a highly developed criminal mind," he said in his first interview in several years. "It was a day-to-day adventure. I never knew what was going to happen next. Everyone knows that's no way to plan a crime."

If you think talk is cheap, you haven't priced the lecture circuit recently. People magazine has, and says the boodle to be had by holding forth from the lectern is considerable. Henry Kissinger gets a flat fee of $15,000, plus expenses for his bodyguard. Ex-NATO commander Alexander Haig took home $500,000 last year in just six months of chit-chat, and Barbara Walters banks top dollar among TV personalities — $10,000 per discourse. But it's Johnny Carson who rakes in the megabucks — $40,000 for each trip to the dais.

Dear Abby:

I am a 30-year-old man. Yesterday I went swimming at a local pool, and while I was in the locker room changing into my swimming trunks, I turned around to find a little girl who appeared to be four or five years old staring at me! I later learned she had been brought there by her father, who was calmly drying himself after showering.

The locker room was crowded with men in various stages of undress. Some were completely naked. All were unaware that they were being observed by a wide-eyed girl.

I found the pool manager and complained. He got a hold of the father and asked him not to bring the child into the men's locker room again. The father blew up and said he had no one to leave his little girl with, and he wasn't about to let her wait for him outside alone. When the father was informed that the other men in the locker room might not appeciate being observed by a young girl, he said, "Any man who is embarrased to be seen naked in front of a four-year-old girl must have something wrong with him!

Abby, I'd like your opinion. Who has something "wrong with him"? Me? Or a man who would bring his daughter into a men's locker room?

Wondering

Dear Wondering:

The father used poor judgment in bringing his daughter into the men's locker room because in doing so he violated the privacy of others. If he had no one to leave the child with, he could have skipped the swim. He was obviously all wet to begin with.

Dear Abby:

You suggested that "older people" should mark the backs of family pictures while they can still remember who's who, where the pictures were taken and the approximate dates. But why only "older people?" That's something everybody should do as soon as a snapshot or pictured is developed.

For years I was too busy (or lazy) to do it, and now that I'm retired and have plenty of time, I can't remember who half the people are!

So here I set with a big box of family pictures, beating my brains out trying to recall names, dates and places. What a mess!

Abby, please remind your readers often to label their pictures. Then their grandchildren won't have to go through what I'm going through now.

Kicking Myself

Dear Kicking:

Not only should family pictures be labeled, but accounts of historical events and the newspaper clippings of births, graduations, marriages and deaths in your family should be dated and kept in a sturdy scrapbook. Fascinating familing histories could be preserved if younger members interviewed older relatives at family gatherings. A tape recorder would be ideal for this purpose.

Succeeding generations will love it!

New York Times

That noble bird, the chicken, has graced mans' table for centuries. As a result of this long relationship, a wide variety of cooking methods have developed to make mans' favorite fowl as delectable as possible.

Many recipes call for chickens of a certain size, and even breed. The following is a guide to chicken sizes, starting with the smallest, as they appear both in markets and on the menus of French restaurants.

Cornish hen: Also called Rock Cornish hen. A young, small chicken that weighs three-quarters to one-and-a-half pounds. Originally it was a cross between two breeds of chicken, the Cornish and the Plymouth Rock. (Today all chickens for eating are crosses between the Cornish, orignally an English breed, and one or more other breeds.)

Poussin: French term for a chicken the size of a Cornish hen.

Broiler: The terms broiler and fryer are frequently used interchangeably, but a broiler is likely to weigh a little less than a fryer, or two to three pounds. Broilers are often sold split in half.

Fryer: Frying chickens are the standard three to four pounders, sometimes called broiler-fryers, and are sold whole, quartered or cut into serving pieces.

Pullet: A small roaster, four to five pounds, usually meant for stewing or roasting. Pullets, as distinguished from roasters, are carried mostly by the better butcher shops that also sell larger roasting chickens.

Poulet: The French term from which the English word pullet is derived. In French it means a two-to-four-pound chicken. A "poulet de grain" is a two-pound chicken, a broiler.

Roaster: A larger chicken meant to be served whole. Once only about four or four-and-a-half pounds, roasters are now available in five-to-seven-pound sizes, suitable for carving. Roaster parts are also being marketed.

Poularde: French for roaster.

Fowl or stewing chicken: An older, larger, tougher bird that usually weighs about six pounds and is suitable only for stewing or making soup. It usually has more flavor than the others.

Poule: An older hen for stewing, the same as a fowl in English.

Capon: A large, meaty and very flavorful desexed rooster for roasting. Capons (in French, chapon), generally run six to twelve pounds.

Supreme de volaille: Boneless chicken breast.

ROAST CHICKEN WITH ROSEMARY AND GARLIC

1 chicken, 3½ pounds (ready to cook), with giblets
Salt and freshly ground pepper
2 sprigs fresh rosemary
2 cloves garlic, unpeeled
2 tablespoons butter
1 onion, ¼ pound, peeled
¾ cup water.

1. Preheat the oven to 425 degrees.
2. Sprinkle the chicken inside and out with salt and pepper. Stuff with the rosemary and garlic. Truss the chicken or not.
3. Place the chicken in a shallow, not too large roasting pan and rub the chicken with the butter. Put the chicken on its side. Scatter the onion, neck, liver, gizzard and heart around the chicken.
4. Place the chicken in the oven and roast about 15 minutes, basting occasionally. Turn the chicken on the opposite side and continue roasting, basting often.
5. Roast 15 minutes and turn the chicken onto its back. Continue roasting, basting, for 15 minutes.
6. Pour off the fat from the roasting pan. Add the water and return chicken to the oven. Roast 10 minutes longer, basting often. Remove from oven and let stand 10 minutes before carving. Serve with pan liquid.

Yield: 2 to 4 servings.

ENGLISH-STYLE CHICKEN POT PIE

1 chicken, 3½ pounds, cut into serving pieces
Salt and freshly ground pepper
1 tablespoon butter
1 cup carrots, scraped and cut into thin rounds
1 cup coarsely chopped onion
¼ cup coarsely chopped celery
1 small clove garlic, finely minced
2 sprigs parsley
1 sprig fresh thyme or ¼ teaspoon dried
1 bay leaf
3 tablespoons flour
¾ cup dry white wine
2 cups chicken broth or water
1 cup small white onions, optional
2 hard-cooked eggs, peeled and cut in half
⅛ teaspoon ground nutmeg
1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce pie pastry (see recipe)
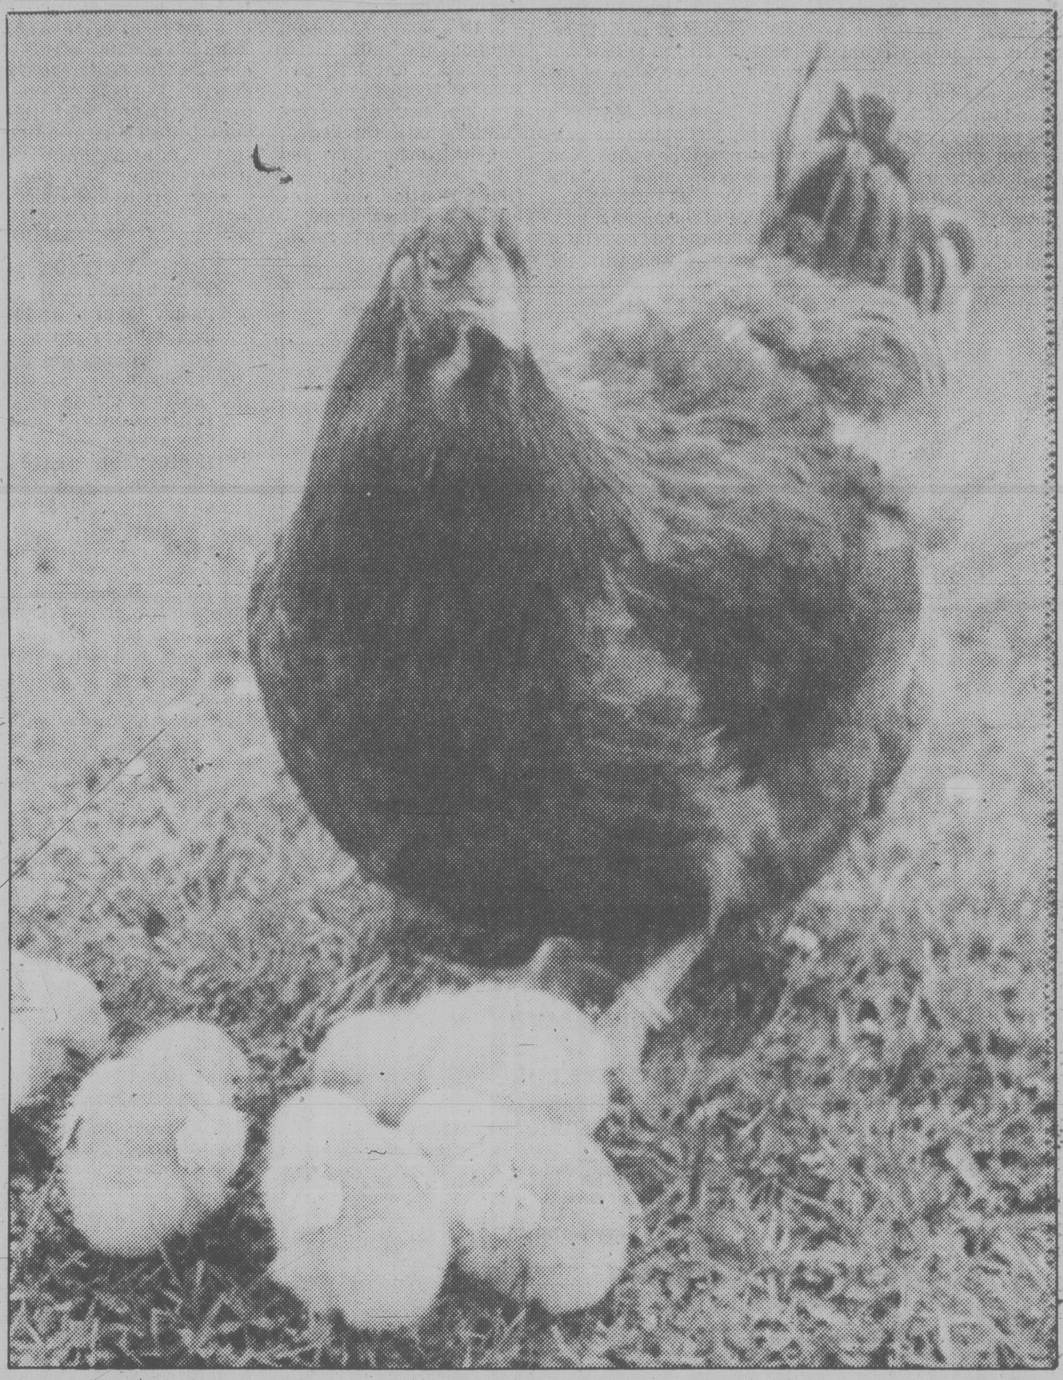
1 egg yolk
1 tablespoon water.

1. Sprinkle the chicken with salt and pepper.
2. Heat the butter in a heavy casserole. Add the chicken pieces skin side down. Cook; when brown on one side, turn the pieces. Scatter the carrots, onion, celery and garlic over the chicken pieces.
3. Add the parsley, thyme, bay leaf and a generous grinding of black pepper. Cook, stirring, about five minutes.
4. Sprinkle with flour. Stir until the pieces are coated. Add the wine and broth. Bring to the boil. Stir and cover. Let simmer 30 minutes or until chicken is tender.
5. Meanwhile, peel the onions. Drop them into boiling water with salt. Simmer about five minutes and drain well.
6. When the chicken is tender, transfer the pieces to a shallow baking dish. An oval dish measuring 14-by-8-by-2 inches is ideal. Arrange the egg halves over the chicken and scatter the onions on top.
7. Skim off the fat from the surface of the sauce in which the chicken was cooked.
8. Pour the sauce into a saucepan and add the nutmeg and Worcestershire. Bring to the boil and pour sauce over the chicken mixture. Let cool.
9. Preheat the oven to 400 degrees.
10. Roll the pastry into an oval, large enough to more than fit the rim of the baking dish.
11. Beat the egg yolk with the water.
12. Brush the egg mixture around the rim and outer sides of the baking dish.
13. Fit the pastry over the dish, pressing it lightly onto the rim and the outer sides.
14. Place the dish in the oven and bake 30 minutes.

Yield: 4 to 6 servings.



Whether it's a pullet, fryer or Cornish hen, the chicken is still a cook's best friend

Pie Pastry

½ cup solid white shortening
1 ½ cups flour
Salt to taste
1 to 2 tablespoons ice water.

1. Put the shortening into the container of a food processor and add the flour and salt.
2. Start processing and gradually pour enough water through the funnel to make a dough that will hold together. Add the least amount of water possible.
3. Turn the dough out onto a lightly floured board and knead briefly. Gather the dough into a ball and wrap in wax paper. Chill for an hour or so.

Yield: Pastry for a one-crust pie.

POACHED CHICKEN

1 chicken, 3½ pounds
8 cups or more water
Salt to taste
20 peppercorns
1 carrot, trimmed, scraped and cut into quarters
¼ cup finely chopped onion
½ cup finely chopped celery
1 bay leaf
1 clove garlic, peeled and crushed
2 sprigs fresh thyme or ½ teaspoon dried.

1. Put the chicken in a deep saucepan and add cold water to cover.
2. Add the remaining ingredients and bring to the boil. Simmer 30 minutes. Turn off the heat and let stand 10 minutes before using. This basic chicken can be used for sandwiches, salads, creamed chicken and so on. Skim fat off broth, strain and reserve for use in other recipes.

Yield: 4 or more servings.

CHICKEN BURGERS

2 pounds skinless, boneless chicken breasts
Salt and freshly ground pepper
½ cup finely chopped parsley
1 cup fine fresh bread crumbs
1 teaspoon ground cumin
¼ cup chicken broth or water

1. Trim the breasts to remove nerve fibers, cartilage and so on.
2. Put the prepared breast meat into the container of a food processor and process until fairly but not totally smooth.
3. Scrape into a mixing bowl. Add salt, pepper, parsley, bread crumbs, cumin and broth or water. Blend well with the hands.
4. Divide the mixture equally into 12 portions. Using dampened hands, pat the portions into flat round patties. Chill until ready to cook.
5. These patties are excellent when cooked on a preheated charcoal grill, about four minutes to a side. Or cook them in a little butter in a heavy skillet, four to five minutes to a side. Serve with a little melted butter poured over.

Yield: 6 servings.

Seek a third opinion when MDs differ

By L. L. COLEMAN, M.D.

I am in a state of confusion. My five-year-old boy gets infections of the ear even during the spring and summer. Whenever he gets a cold, his hearing is not as sharp. I took him to an ear doctor who wants to open the ears and put tubes in. But his pediatrician says the condition will go away by itself. I don't know which way to turn.

L.M.

Dear L.M.:

Resolving the problem of a child's ears is sometimes less difficult than resolving the controversy that exists today between pediatricians and ear specialists.

For many years, the removal of the tonsils and the adenoids was considered an excellent procedure when children had very specific indications for that operation. Unfortunately, far too many tonsillectomies were done indiscriminately and routinely. The consequent result of this was a wide backward swing of the pendulum. Today, there is basic antagonism toward an operation that is very beneficial when there are definite and clearcut indications for it.

Years ago, before the advent of the antibiotics, children would develop infections of the ear, followed by a thin, watery discharge of pus. Today the fluid in the middle ear becomes thick and gelatinous as a result of long use of the antibiotics and does not drain freely as before.

In order to empty this honey-like fluid from the middle ear, a myringotomy procedure is frequently performed. This simply means the opening of the eardrum through the outer ear canal. This releases the pus, or fluid, and immediately increases the capacity to hear.

Unfortunately, the opening in the eardrum tends to close very quickly, allowing another accumulation of the fluid behind the eardrum. To prevent this, tiny polyethylene tubes are inserted through the opening of the eardrum. The tubes are removed after they have served their function. They may stay in that position for months without doing any harm. The opening of the ear, followed by the insertion of tubes, has been done with great frequency during the past 20 years.

There now is a tendency to avoid the use of tubes, for it is believed that the opening of the ears — followed by the meticulous removal of the tonsils and adenoids — is quite sufficient to increase the hearing and prevent recurrences of the ear problem.

The resolution of your particular problem will depend on your getting another opinion from an otolaryngologist (ear specialist). Then have all three of your doctors objectively discuss your child's problem so you will be relieved of your conflict and confusion.

Revel in the creation of citrusy delights

New York Times

In the world of food, one of the most quoted of writers is an English clergyman named Sydney Smith who lived from 1771 to 1845. He wrote about tea and how to make salads and managed to pursue his gourmet concerns in spite of difficulties such as isolation: "My living in Yorkshire was so far out of the way," he wrote, "that it was actually 12 miles from a lemon."

Blessed as we are with an abundance of lemons in this country, we can revel in such citrusy delights as the desserts detailed here: a lemon souffle, a lemon-and-mint ice and, best of all, a French lemon tart. Those who try that tart may never again hunger for lemon meringue pie.

SOUFFLE AU CITRON
(Lemon souffle)

- 2 large lemons
- 2 cups sugar
- Juice of one lemon
- 2 cups milk
- ½ cup flour
- 8 eggs, separated
- 1 tablespoon cornstarch.

1. Peel the lemons with a swivel-bladed peeler, removing all the yellow but as little of the white of the skin as possible.

2. Place the skin on a board and cut into the thinnest possible strips. Cut these strips into bits and chop them as small as possible. Put them into a mixing bowl and add one cup of sugar. Mix well with the fingers. Cover and let stand 24 hours.

3. Spoon the lemon rind and sugar mixture into a small saucepan. Add the lemon juice and bring to the boil. Simmer over low heat, stirring frequently, about 10 minutes. Let cool, then chill well.

4. Generously butter a 9- or 10-cup souffle dish and let chill in freezer.

5. In a heavy saucepan, combine the milk, flour, egg yolks, one-half cup sugar and cornstarch. Cook over low heat, stirring constantly, until thickened. Add the lemon mixture and bring just to the boil, stirring. Spoon this into a large mixing bowl and let cool.

6. Preheat oven to 400 degrees.

7. Beat the whites and when they start to form peaks, gradually beat in the remaining half cup of sugar. Continue beating to make a stiff meringue.

8. Add one-third of the whites to the lemon mixture and beat in with a whisk. Fold in the remaining whites with a plastic spatula. Pour the mixture into the prepared souffle dish and place in the oven. Bake 10 minutes and reduce the temperature to 375 degrees. Bake 15 minutes longer. If you wish the souffle to be less moist in the center, bake 10 minutes longer.

Yield: Six to eight servings.

TARTE AU CITRON
(French lemon tart)

- Pastry for a 9- or 10-inch pie (see recipe)
- 5 egg yolks
- ½ cup sugar
- ½ cup heavy cream
- 6 tablespoons fresh lemon juice
- 1 tablespoon grated lemon rind
- ½ cup finely chopped peeled apple.

1. Preheat oven to 400 degrees.

2. Roll the dough out on a lightly floured board to an eighth of an inch thickness. Fit it into a 10-inch metal quiche or flan pan. Trim off the edges.

3. Line the pastry with wax paper and add dried beans to cover the bottom.

4. Place the pastry in the oven and bake 10 minutes.

5. Remove the beans and wax paper. Reduce the oven temperature to 350 degrees.

6. Combine the yolks and sugar in a mixing bowl. Beat vigorously with a wire whisk until the mixture is thick and light lemon in color.

7. Beat in the cream, lemon juice, lemon rind and chopped apple.

8. Pour the mixture into the prepared pastry and place the pie in the bottom of the oven. Bake 30 minutes. Let cool before serving.

Yield: Four servings.

The tart but loveable lemon adds zest to a variety of dishes

CROUSTADE
(Pastry shell)

- 12 tablespoons cold butter
- 1½ cups flour
- 2 tablespoons sugar
- 2 to 3 tablespoons ice water.

1. Cut the butter into small cubes and add them to the container of a food processor. Add the flour and sugar.

2. Start processing while gradually adding the water. Add only enough water so that the dough holds together and can be shaped into a ball.

3. Wrap the dough in wax paper and chill until ready to use.

Yield: Pastry for a 9- or 10-inch pie.

GRANITE AU CITRON ET A LA MENTHE
(Lemon-and-mint ice)

- 14 fresh lemons, approximately
- 2 cups sugar
- 4 cups water
- 4 sprigs fresh mint
- Grated rind of one lemon
- 3 tablespoons finely chopped fresh mint leaves
- Sprigs of fresh mint for garnish.

1. Grate the rind of two lemons and set the gratings aside. Cut these lemons in half and squeeze the juice. Set the juice aside.

2. Cut off a thin slice from the bottom of each remaining lemon so that they will stand upright when later filled with lemon ice.

3. Cut off a thin slice of the top of each lemon about half an inch from the top. Scoop out the pulp, using a sturdy coffee spoon. Reserve the cut-off tops of each lemon. Press the pulp of these lemons through a sieve and add this juice to the other lemon juice. You will need two cups of lemon juice in all.

4. Arrange the hollowed-out lemon shells on a platter and put them in the freezer.

5. Combine the sugar, water and the four fresh mint sprigs in a saucepan. Bring to the boil and let boil five minutes. Add the lemon rind and lemon juice and cool. Chill thoroughly. Add the chopped mint leaves.

6. Pour the mixture into the container of an electric or hand-cranked ice-cream freezer and freeze according to the manufacturer's instructions.

7. Spoon enough of the ice into each of the frozen lemons to fill them. Return the lemons to the freezer until ready to serve. Garnish the top of each filled lemon with a sprig of mint. Put the lemon tops on the side of each serving as decoration. The remaining ice can be served on another occasion.

Yield: 12 or more servings.

We're eating less but . . .

By ROSE DOSTI
Los Angeles Times

Canadians and Americans eat too much while their southern neighbors, the Mexicans, eat too little.

Health authorities from the three countries discussed the health status of their nations and some of the developing solutions at the Sixth Western Hemisphere Nutrition Congress in Los Angeles last week.

Surveys in both the United States and Canada show that people — especially women — are eating less but gaining more.

In Canada, according to Joyce Beare-Rogers, Ph.D,, chief of nutrition research at the Department of National Health & Welfare in Ottawa, food intake is lower in women but weight is higher than in other groups. "This indicates that people have not been successful in balancing energy intake with energy output over a period of time," said Beare-Rogers. She explained that weight gain which has accumulated over a long period of time has not been reduced sufficiently to balance energy intake.

In Mexico, on the other hand, calorie deficiency far outstrips protein deficiency as a major health problem. According to Hector Bourges, M.D., Ph.D., head of the Department of Nutritional Physiology and Food Technology, National Institute of Nutrition, a diet too low in caloric density is especially prevalent in rural and certain urban centers. Severe calorie deficiency problems predominate in the south and southeastern sections of Mexico where villages tend to be cut off from distribution centers because of geographic factors. Within the family structure, children younger than three and lactating women are hardest hit nutritionally.

The Mexican diet, said Bourges, is a monotonous one consisting primarily of corn tortillas, some beans, when available, and a few local vegetables and fruit when in season. "Maybe 10 to 15 times a year, people might have some animal food (meat)," he said. The diet, he added, was hardly sufficient to sustain normal caloric density and therefore results in a 5 per cent shortage of calories in an already low-calorie diet.

Here are some of the problems and developing solutions discussed by the authorities:

According to Beare-Rogers, the Canadian government's concern over the obesity problem has resulted in national nutrition policy with accompany "Nutrition Recommendations" similar to those put out by the USDA and the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. The Canadian recommendations are endorsed by both professional societies and the food industry. They call for a reduction of total fat from 40 per cent of the total calories to 35 per cent. "There is no mention of cholesterol because the recommendations are not based on therapeutic diets but are intended for the public at large," said Beare-Rogers. "We do not have sufficient scientific evidence to support any dramatic changes in cholesterol intake," she added.

The Canadian recommendations do, however, state that a source of some polyunsaturated fat (linoleic acid) should be included in the intake of fats.

The recommendations go on to advise an increase in consumption of cereal products and fruits and vegetables while reducing intakes of simple carbohydrates (sugar) and salt.

Balancing energy intake with energy output to avoid overweight also is a goal, and when ideal weight is finally achieved, special attention must be given to insure intake of nutrient-dense foods.

"This point is especially important for the elderly who tend to require fewer calories but high levels of nutrients," said Beare-Rogers.

Barbecuing: The most fascinating of 'sciences'

the 60-minute gourmet

I have often been asked over the years if, as a professional chef, I am ever bored with cooking, and the answer is no. I take as much pleasure in scrambling an egg as I do in making an elaborate souffle or turning out an omelet.

There is one form of cookery that fascinates me as much as any, however, and that is barbecuing. That is because it is probably the most inexact "science" of any form of cookery. There are so many factors involved: The intensity of the heat, the direction of the wind, the placement of the grill in relation to the source of heat, the nature of the food to be grilled and so on.

Theoretically, grilling or broiling over charcoal should demand more care than most forms of cooking, and yet the latitude allowed the charcoal cook is greater than in more serious forms of cookery. If the surface of a grilled food is a bit charred, that is forgivable. If the leg of lamb turns out to be a bit rare or the chicken a bit overcooked, that's acceptable, too. Within reason.

It almost goes without saying that fish and shellfish are the most delicate of foods that are cooked over charcoal. And woe to the cook who produced an overcooked fillet of fish. In summer I enjoy cooking shrimp on the grill and, preferably, with grilled vegetables cooked alongside.

The base for my marinade is a simple dressing of oil and vinegar or oil and lemon that can be varied a dozen or a thousand different ways. It generally depends on the flavors I find in my herb garden or refrigerator. On a recent occasion these turned out to be fresh ginger root, fresh thyme and parsley. You can take the oil and lemon base in the recipe outlined here and make your own substitutions. Substitute fresh rosemary for the ginger and parsley, or fresh tarragon or vinegar for the lemon juice and so on.

This is one of the simplest and hastiest of summer meals to prepare. The cooking time for the shrimp is about five minutes; the cooking time for the vegetables — in this case zucchini and tomatoes — is 10 minutes. The foods are cooked, of course, simultaneously.

SCAMPI GRILLEES
(Charcoal-broiled shrimp)

- 24 large shrimp, about one pound
- Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
- 1 tablespoon finely chopped fresh ginger
- ¼ teaspoon hot pepper flakes
- 2 tablespoons finely chopped parsley
- 1 bay leaf
- ½ teaspoon chopped fresh thyme or ¼ teaspoon dried thyme
- 2 tablespoons olive oil
- Juice of half a lemon
- 6 tablespoons butter
- 1 clove garlic, crushed.

1. Preheat a charcoal broiler.
2. Using a pair of kitchen shears, cut along the upper rim of the shrimp. You may peel the shrimp or not, according to taste. If you peel them, leave the last tail segment intact. Whether you peel them or not, run the shrimp under cold running water and remove the black vein along the back. Pat the shrimp dry.
3. Combine the shrimp, salt, pepper, ginger, pepper flakes, parsley, bay leaf, thyme, olive oil and lemon juice in a mixing bowl. Let stand at room temperature for 30 minutes.
4. Put the shrimp on the broiler and cook about one or two minutes. Turn and cook two to three minutes on the other side. Transfer the shrimp to a warm serving dish.
5. Melt the butter with the garlic in a saucepan. When bubbling, discard the garlic. Pour the butter over the shrimp and serve.

Yield: 4 servings.

LEGUMES GRILLES
(Grilled vegetables)

- 4 medium-size zucchini, about 1¼ pounds
- 4 red, ripe, firm tomatoes
- Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
- 4 tablepoons olive oil
- 2 tablespoons finely chopped fresh basil.

1. Preheat a charcoal broiler.
2. Trim off the ends of the zucchini. Split the zucchini lengthwise in half.
3. Using a sharp paring knife, score the flesh of each zucchini half without cutting into the skin. Arrange them scored side up.
4. Cut neatly around the core of each tomato and remove it. Cut each tomato in half crosswise. Arrange the tomato halves cut side up.
5. Sprinkle the zucchini and tomatoes with salt, pepper and oil.
6. Put the tomatoes and zucchini cut side down on the broiler. Cook about three to four minutes. Turn and cook about six minutes on the second side. Transfer to a serving dish. Sprinkle with basil and serve.

Yield: 4 servings.

Jobs first: gov't

Continuation of jobs will be one of the prime concerns in the forest ministry's review of a takeover of Rayonier Canada (B.C.) Ltd. by three B.C. companies, Forests Minister Tom Waterland said Tuesday.

But he said he cannot guarantee all Rayonier plants will continue as they are now.

Colin Gabelmann (NDP — North Island) had asked Waterland in the legislature to ensure existing employment at Port Alice on Vancouver Island and other Rayonier operations be maintained before he gives approval to the takeover.

"If the outcome of the takeover is that operations will become more concentrated and there will be less jobs, this is not in the best interest of forest industry workers, or the stability of communities which rely on the forest industry for their economic base," he said.

Waterland said there have been some suggestions that the plants need to be improved and modernized, and this, in itself, could have effects on employment.

"But we're interested in the efficient use of the Crown resource and the maintenance of all possible employment by that use," he said.

Doman Industries Ltd, Whonnock Indutries Ltd. and B.C. Forest Products Ltd., will purchase Rayonier from the U.S.-based International Telephone and Telegraph Corp. for $420 million.

Utility board rapped

The provincial governments' proposed Utilities Commission Act contains procedural provisions which would give too much authority to the cabinet and destroy the act's effectiveness, says a national public interest group.

The legislation introduced during the current legislative session provides for establishment of an energy project review process to be administered by the newly-created B.C. Utilities Commission.

However, Andrew Roman, general counsel for the Public Interest Advocacy Centre, said giving too much authority to cabinet could lead to legal problems.

"The bill creates cabinet as the decision-maker and a regulatory decision-maker acting pursuant to a statute is normally subject to court review," he said.

"There is the likelihood that the way the bill is drafted now, the ministers could be sued by whichever party is unhappy with the hearing and there's always one loser."

Roman said he believes that may have been included inadvertently, but adds the commission is being set up as if the cabinet had no confidence in it.

The energy and environment ministers will set down the term of reference for each set of hearings and also have the authority to exempt projects from the review process.

One proud poppa, Smeltzer leads Rocks home in opener

Larry Smeltzer of Victoria Shamrocks was one proud poppa Tuesday night.

Wife Dianne presented the affable goaltender with an eight-pound, six-ounce son in the morning and Smeltzer and his mates went out and celebrated in the evening by defeating New Westminster Salmonbellies 10-8 in the first game of the best-of-seven Western Lacrosse Association final played before a crowd of about 2,500 at Memorial Arena.

The second game is Thursday at Queen's Park Arena and the third game is here Saturday.

"I really wanted to win this one," said the smiling father after the game. "His name's Erin, a good Irish name," added Smeltzer, who has two daughters.

"We wanted a boy because this was going to be our last one."

Smeltzer said he had a little trouble concentrating early in the game because of the happy news but he but settled down when the Shamrocks got behind early.

His teammates did their part to help Smeltzer out. He's used to facing anywhere from 40 to 60 shots a game but he had to face only 27 Tuesday. Smeltzer did have to make several big saves, however, including three on wide-open breakaways.

He also was blessed with help from the goalposts on six occasions.

The Shamrocks were slow off the blocks but despite a thoroughly sloppy first period they trailed only 3-2.

Kevin Alexander, who had another outstanding night, scored three times in the second period as Victoria took an 8-7 lead.

The Irish dominated play in the third period outshooting New Westminster 9-5.

"It took us a while to get our wheels going," said coach Joe McCrea. "We were really lethargic in the first period. Maybe we just got used to playing every night."

Rod Banister, who made 34 saves, played well in the New Westminster goal - he stopped Alexander 10 times - but otherwise New Westminster coach Al Lewthwaite wasn't happy with the play of his squad.

"I guess we let down after beating Coquitlam. It's disappointing. I didn't think we would," said Lewthwaite before adding, "we only lost by two, I'm not worried about winning the series."

Lewthwaite had expected his troops to be high after winning the last four games to beat the Adanacs 4-3 in the semi-final series.

Asked if he had any plans for checking Alexander, Lewthwaite replied: "No, nothing special but I wish the referees would start calling the moving block. That 10 (Dave Lowden) is a useless lacrosse player. All he does is push into people. That's a moving block but they never call it. And Alexander, he spears and butt ends our players but they never call him. They have different rules for Alexander."

Alexander finished with four goals, the fourth being his 100th of the year. He scored 80 during the regular season and has had 20 in the playoffs.

Jim Boyd and Jim Lynch each scored two and Dan Green and Chris Hall had singles.

Brian Tasker scored twice for Vancouver and Gilles Bezeau, Mark Tuura, Ivan Tuura, Steve Manning, Ray Durante and Cory Carlyle counted once each.

New Westminster took eight minor penalties to Victoria's five.

The series winner will advance to the Mann Cup final to be played in the home of the eastern champion.

FIRING SHOT FROM FLOOR toward New Westminster Salmonbellies' goaltender Rod Banister, Jim Lynch (25) of Victoria Shamrocks eludes blocking attempt by Eric Cowieson during second period of opening game in best-of-seven Western Lacrosse Association playoff final Tuesday night at Memorial Arena. Lynch's shot hit goal post but Shamrocks went on to win 10-8.

Brett's hitting streak ends but .400 target still there

George Brett can forget about equalling Joe DiMaggio's fabled hitting streak but he still has that wonderful year, 1941, on his mind.

That was the year DiMag connected in 56 successive games. It was also the season Ted Williams batted .406, the last time a major league baseball player has managed two hits for every five times at bat over an entire campaign.

Brett's hopes of catching DiMaggio, slim though they may have seemed, were dashed Tuesday night when he went 0-for-3 while his Kansas City Royals edged Texas Rangers 4-3 in an American League game.

Brett's string was snapped at 30 games, second-longest in the majors this year.

But he's still keeping his average above .400, slipping from .404 to .401.

Meanwhile, with seven weeks left to the regular season, pennant races are beginning to crystalize with three of the four divisions promising exciting stretch runs.

Only in the American League West, where the Royals seem in complete command, does the race appear settled.

In the AL East, Baltimore Orioles are posing a challenge to New York Yankees. If those teams go down the stretch, they will be doing plenty of scoreboard watching. That's because they finished their season's business Monday night in Baltimore and will not meet again this year unless they finish in a tie.

Both the Yankees and Orioles headed west after playing each other eight times in 11 days. They will play Seattle Mariners, Oakland A's and California Angels before returning home Aug. 28 to entertain the same three West Coast clubs.

A five-game sweep of New York Mets has thrust Philadelphia Phillies into the midst of the National League East Division race, battling Montreal Expos and Pittsburgh Pirates for the top.

The Phillies moved within 3½ games of the first-place Pirates on the weekend and have won seven of their last eight after being swept in a four-game series by Pittsburgh.

The Phillies began a nine-game home stand against West Division opponents Tuesday night and then go west for series with San Diego Padres, San Francisco Giants and Los Angeles Dodgers. That takes them through Sept. 7. After that it will be East Division opponents the rest of the way.

Included in that final month are five games at home against Pittsburgh and Montreal and five on the road, including the final three games of the season in Montreal.

Pittsburgh, coming off the sweep of the Phillies, lost two of three to the Mets, then won three of four against Montreal to drop the Expos into second place.

Now the Pirates are peeking into the West Division race, playing 12 of their next 15 games against Houston Astros and Cincinnati Reds.

Then Pittsburgh returns to the East for the final month, including four games against Philadelphia and five against Montreal.

Cincinnati is in the midst of a homestand against East teams and will play Pittsburgh seven times in the next two weeks. The Reds' last month includes five games at home against Los Angeles and Houston, a three-game series in Houston and three more games in LA.

Two City juniors gain tennis quarter-finals

WEST VANCOUVER, — Laird Dunlop and Dale Willard of Victoria scored wins Tuesday to advance to the quarter-finals of the Canadian national junior tennis championships.

Dunlop, No. 4 seed in the men's under-18 division, defeated Benoit Lemieux of Laval. Other top seeds also advanced.

The two top seeds, Martin Wostenholme of Ottawa and Glenn Michibata of Toronto, advanced with wins over Louis Lambert of Quebec City and Steve Yuska of Waterloo, Ont. Third-seeded Doug Burke of Toronto topped Tony Macken of Vancouver 6-4, 6-4.

In the men's under-16, top-seeded Robbie Horwood of Thornhill, Ont., moved into the quarter-finals with a 4-6, 6-3, 6-1 decision over David Gibbons of Islington, Ont. Second-seeded Dowie Cosijn of Calgary had a much easier time with a 6-1, 7-5 win over David Burchell of Halifax.

Other quarter-finalists are Willard, Paul Beck of Richmond Hill, Ont., Martin Laurendeau of Montreal, Hatem McDadi of Toronto, Chris Pridham of Toronto (who upset seventh-seeded Hugh Kwok of Montreal 6-3, 6-1), and Andre Lambert of Quebec City.

Diane Blondeau of Quebec City, seeded No. 1 in the women's under-18 division, badly wants a rematch with Jill Hetherington of Toronto. She took a giant step toward that objective Tuesday during second-round play.

Blondeau defeated Sylvie Belanger of Montreal 7-6, 6-2 to advance to the quarter-finals. Meanwhile, No. 3 seed Hetherington won her second match, 6-2, 6-2 over Patti Henderson of Agincourt, Ont.

Hetherington beat Blondeau in the national junior indoor final here earlier this year.

If Blondeau and Hetherington win their quarter-final matches Thursday, they will meet in the semi-finals Friday.

Grouse outlook not good

by stewart lang

Some rambling notes along the trail:

Bow and arrow hunters face a mixed chance of success when they take to the field Saturday to bag buck deer, grouse and black bear on most of Vancouver Island.

The regular buck season for rifle hunters opens Sept. 6 and the antlerless season gets underway Nov. 8.

Shotgunners can start to take grouse and ptarmigan in most Island areas Aug. 30 and band-tailed pigeons become fair game Sept. 1.

But, these dates are extremely general and hunters of all types are advised to pick up a copy of the current hunting regulations before setting foot in the bush — there's too many rules to summarize in this space.

Daryll Hebert, the Fish and Wildlife Branch's regional wildlife biologist, said a wet spring has suppressed the grouse population. Chick counts conducted by the branch were down this year.

The deer population, on the other hand, varies widely between the south and north ends of the Island.

Predation by wolves on the north end of the Island has hit deer rather heavily. A recent survey showed fawns constituted a relatively-meagre 10 per cent of the combined population of fawns and mature does — despite a mild winter.

On the south end of the Island, fawns make up 80 per cent of the same segment of the population and in many cases does have produced twins.

Hunters (and fishermen) are reminded that the provincial and federal governments have set up a toll-free hot line to report violations of fish and game laws. The office can be reached by telephoning the operator and asking for Zenith 2235.

Another toll-free number to keep in mind — especially during the early part of the season while the bush is dry — is Zenith 5555. That's the one to use if you come across a forest fire.

The importance of changing line on your fishing reel was brought home in a rather dramatic way while visiting the Northwest Territories during my recent holidays.

Anticipating a little heavier fish than found in local fresh water, I changed the line on my light spin-casting reel from four to eight-pound test.

The change in strength helped no doubt when I managed to land a pike that weighed in the vicinity of 15 pounds and was around a yard long.

Most of the length appeared to be a mouth lined with half-inch teeth — but more on that later.

It's a good idea to change your line at least twice a year in any case.

Monofilament tends to weaken with age and takes on a "set" in tight curls after several months on the reel.

The curls decrease casting distance and accuracy.

Registered shellfish processing plants are now allowed to resume havesting clams from the Strait of Juan de Fuca and Georgia.

Federal fisheries has located no new outbreaks of paralytic shellfish poisoning (commonly called red tide) blooms since June 13 and toxic levels in clam samples from previously infested waters are approaching safe levels.

The commerical operations, however, will be routinely sampled and tested for the poisonous algae.

But, because it is impossible to sample every beach on the affected parts of the coast, the ban on recreational harvesting of bivalves — clams, oysters, mussels and scallops — will continue through the end of summer.

Several more sports fishing closures have been imposed by federal fisheries to protect depleted migrating chinook salmon populations.

Portions of Muchalat Inlet, Tlupana Inlet and Hanna Channel are now closed along with tidal and non-tidal portions of the Gold, Burman, Deserted, Sucwoa, Canton, Conuma, Nesook and Tlupana rivers.

On Aug. 29, the boundaries will be revised and further closures imposed in the Kyuquot Sound, Tahsis Inlet and Zeballos Inlet areas — including tidal and non-tidal portions of the Tashsish, Kaouk, Artlish, Tahsis, Leiner, Zeballos and Little Zeballos rivers.

Specific boundaries of the closures are available in post offices and from federal fisheries officers in Gold River, Zeballos and Tahsis.

Moen's home run big blow

Barry Moen cracked a two-run homer in the first inning Tuesday to spur Mears Realty to a 4-1 decision over Victoria Athletics in a Heywood Men's Softball League playoff game at Heywood Avenue Park.

Mears, who won the best-of-five semi-final 3-1, now faces Knowles Realty in the best-of-seven final which starts tonight.

With one out in the first frame, Dave Rivers drew a base on balls to set the stage for Moen's blast. A sacrifice fly by Bruce Thomson and a single by Dave Rivers in the second inning produced the other two Mears runs.

Greg Gange pitched a five-hitter for the victory.

In Stuffy McGinnis Men's League play at Central Park, Mel Nelson tossed a six-hitter to lead Victoria Athletics to a 5-0 decision over Tally-Ho in the opener of a semi-final series.

Nelson struck out five batters and walked none.

Tim Galavan walked, went to second on a wild pitch and scored on an error to produce what proved to be the winning run in the first inning. Bob Gray supplied two more runs with a fifth-inning single. Athletics and Tally-Ho clash again at 6:30 Thursday.

Elsewhere, Rawlings downed Prairie Inn 10-9 and Sooke dropped Allman's Joy 14-13 in Lower Island Association intermediate "B" women's league semi-finals.

Rawlings and Sooke square off in the opening game of a best-of-three final at 6:30 tonight in Hyacinth Park.

OTTAWA (CP) — Twenty-five Canadians under the age of 18 have won preliminary places on the cadet team that will represent this country at the 1981 Bisley small arms matches competition — the unofficial world championship — near Woking, England.

The 25 made the team after piling up the highest aggregate scores in the 98th annual national small arms matches competition last week at Connaught Ranges, about 20 kilometres west of here.

The cadet team will be narrowed down to 18 members after further competition in Victoria next March. The names of the 18 members of the Dominion of Canada Rifle Association squad which will also participate at the 1981 Bisley competion were released while the Canadian Forces team will be chosen later.

Top shooter in the cadet aggregate competition was Ronald Estrada of Tappen, B.C., who fired 597 out of 630. Andre Guertin of Granby, Que., took second spot.

Five young women are members of the preliminary team: Audrey Davies of Powell River; Kelly Navid, Campbell River; Leslie McMillen, Moose Jaw; Jane, Veldhuis, Cochrane, Alta., and Christine Lamb, St. Catharines.

Other team members from Western Canada will be: David Palmer and Robert Izatt, Winnipeg; Paul Demeules, Vedder Crossing, B.C.; Glen Adams, Fort McMurray, Alta.; Charles Davis, Burnaby; Karla Pivarnyik, Ladysmith; John Dymond, Vancouver, and Gordon Marr, Port Moody.

Clipper (foreground) closely trails Freedom in rough seas

Freedom wins opener

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Freedom resumed its relentless campaign for the America's Cup defender's role Tuesday by beating Russell Long's Clipper in the opening day of the final trials for U.S. boats.

Dennis Conner skippered Freedom to a 26-second win over Clipper in fickle Rhode Island Sound winds that prompted the supervising race committee of the New York Yacht Club to shorten the course to 12 kilometres.

Meanwhile, France 3 improved its record in the challenger trials to 3-1 at the expense of Lionheart of England, which was forced early in the race to retrieve a crew member thrown overboard.

Freedom was lagging slightly behind Clipper at the start of the United States match, but found itself in a better position on the first leg to take advantage of the wind as it filled in from the east. Freedom rounded the first mark 49 seconds ahead of Clipper.

Long closed the margin on the second leg as the wind dropped off, but Conner still had a comfortable enough lead to coast home with his 31st win of the summer against only two losses.

Courageous, the 1977 cup defender, remained at the dock Tuesday, undergoing repairs, but was scheduled to meet Clipper today.

Lionheart was trailing France 3 on the first leg of the course when Richard Clampett of Hamble, Hampshire, fell over the side in rough seas. The English yacht turned back to pull Clampett from the water unharmed, giving France 3 a big lead.

Australia, 2-0, and Sweden's Sverige, 0-2, were to resume their matches today.

Stampeder interceptions shock Eskimos and fans

EDMONTON (CP) — There was no joy in Commonwealth Stadium Tuesday night — the mighty Edmonton Eskimos had struck out.

Calgary Stampeders shot down the vaunted Edmonton passing game with four interceptions and made off with a 16-15 upset that yanked the Eskimos from the Canadian Football League's undefeated ranks.

The defeat was a shock to the usual sellout crowd of 42,778, which hasn't seen the Eskimos lose a regular-season game at home since late October, 1978.

"To win here is a key factor," said Ardell Wiegandt, who had said before the game that defeat might have brought an abrupt end to his rookie season as Calgary's head coach. "To be a good football team you've got to beat the best in their home park."

The architects of Calgary's unexpected victory, in a defensive struggle that snapped the Eskimos' winning string at five, were defensive ends Reggie Lewis and Ronnie Paggett, cornerback Terry Irwin, halfback Willie Armstead and end Kelvin Kirk.

"The defensive ends put on the pressure that we needed inside," Wiegandt said. "The defensive backs stayed with the receivers even when the quarterbacks moved around."

Irwin made three interceptions to snuff out Eskimo scoring threats. Armstead out-manoeuvred Eskimo defender Gregg Butler on a crucial fourth-quarter pass play and Kirk caught a touchdown pass that spelled the difference.

Armstead turned a short pass from Ken Johnson into a 55-yard effort that was followed by the scoring toss to Kirk. The other Calgary points were produced to J. T. Hay, who had two field goals, a convert and a single, and Mike McTague's two punt singles.

"We just about had him (Johnson) sacked," Edmonton head coach Hugh Campbell said of the play that resulted in Kirk's touchdown. "He threw the ball up for grabs. Our man and their man jumped for it and their guy tipped it and caught it. It wasn't a classic touchdown but we had some plays that weren't too much of classics themselves."

One Eskimo who was not up to his classic form was kicker Dave Cutler. Cutler went into the game needing two field goals to break George Blanda's all-pro career record of 335. He got one, from 32 yards out, but missed on three other attempts — two from 43 yards and the third from 37.

"Maybe I pressed a little bit," said Cutler, "Consciously I wasn't but maybe I worried a little more than I thought."

Cutler wound up with a field goal, three singles and a convert as the Eskimos were unable to muster a touchdown until Tom Wilkinson found Brian Kelly in the end zone with 70 seconds left to play. Edmonton's other points came when Tom Forzani conceded a safety on a third-down situation with 16 seconds left in the game.

"I got conservative after I threw an interception on the first drive," Wilkinson said of his inability to get the Edmonton offence rolling. Relief ace Warren Moon met the same fate.

Barnes headed west?

MONTREAL (CP) — Quarterback Joe Barnes wants to be traded from Montreal Alouettes and the Canadian Football League club has apparently been making every effort to accommodate him.

"I asked Joe (coach Scannella) last Thursday to trade me and he said he'd try," Barnes said. "He agreed that maybe it was time to go."

Scannella told Barnes that he had called all five Western Conference teams and that only Calgary Stampeders and B. C. Lions were interested.

But Jack Gotta, general manager of the Stampeders, and a spokesman for the Lions denied they had been conacted by the Alouettes.

"That statement is a lie," Scannella said.

Silent Slade scores

As has been noted before, age apparently means little to a standardbred.

But it bears repeating.

Take Tuesday night at Sandown Raceway for instance. The oldest horse in the field of the featured ninth, a $7,000 claimer, was Silent Slade at 13. But the bay gelding didn't let that stand in his way.

Driven by Sten Ericsson, who scored on two winners, Silent Slade simply romped a 2:03 mile to leave five others in his wake.

It was his third win of the meeting, the 11th of the year and he returned $12.40, $5.10 and $2.40.

Ericsson's other victory came with Pegassus Becky ($7.80) in the third.

Prices were mostly good for the players with five winners paying off in double figures.

Senga Glo, a longshot, combined with one of the favorites, Successful Order, for a $220.30 Exactor in the second as Peggis Sugar Plum and Successful Order returned $69.90 for the double.

And in the ninth, Dancing Bye, a five-year old bay gelding driven by Grant Hollingsworth, came from off the pace to set up a $982.50 triactor with Cedarwood Champ and Miss Royal Silbrook.

Racing resumes Thursday.

'Coke' use rampant in NBA

LOS ANGELES (AP) — As many as three out of four professional basketball players use cocaine and perhaps 10 per cent use its potent derivative freebase, The Times reported Tuesday.

Moreover, the National Basketball Association is expected to form a committee to investigate drug use and stress and to make recommendations for education and rehabilitation, the paper said.

"There is not a team in the league you can confidently say does not have a drug problem," said Frank Layden, general manager of Utah Jazz.

An informal survey of people in the game brought estimates that anywhere from 40 per cent to 75 per cent of all NBA players use cocaine, the paper said.

For example:

— Jazz forward Bernard King was arrested last January on charges of sodomy and possession of cocaine.

— Jazz guard Terry Furlow, who died in a car accident last May, hadtraces of valium and cocaine in his bloodstream, an autopsy showed.

— Atlanta Hawks guard Eddie Johnson was arrested July 13 and charged with possession of cocaine (found in a car he had rented) and driving under the influence of alcohol. He says he is innocent.

Although most players contacted did not want to comment, Seattle SuperSonics guard Paul Westphal told the newspaper that he thinks half the NBA's players use cocaine, based on talks with players and trainers. He said he hasn't used it or seen others use it.

"Coke is rampant in the league, man," said a player who left the game a year ago and asked his name not be used. "I mean, 75 per cent use it.

"It's like drinking water. You sniff cocaine to be sociable."

Michael Gearon, president of Atlanta Hawks, said he believes as many as half the players in the league may use cocaine and as many as 10 per cent may use freebase.

The NBA Players Association will not support any player convicted of drug use (stronger than marijuana), said its general counsel, Larry Fleisher.

In a prepared statement, NBA Commissioner Larry O'Brien said the NBA has "no indication that the percentage of players in our league who may have tried drugs exceeds the percentage of the general population which has experimented with drugs."

Cocaine is a fast-acting drug that produces euphoria and mood elevation.

"It's really scary," said one player of cocaine use, asking that his name not be used. "Some of the best players in the league, players who don't even drink, are into freebase, and they are spending some very big sums of money."

Unhappy Kreiner will ski 'her way'

OTTAWA (CP) — Two members of the national ski team have decided to hang up their skis after a three-week training session at Mount Hood, Ore., and Kathy Kreiner of Timmins, Ont., has decided to compete on her own.

Loni Klettl, 20, of North Bay, Ont., and Judi Richardson, 19, of Calgary have advised the team they are retiring and will not travel with it to a five-week training program at Hinteraux, Austria, next month.

Both girls decided their results from last year and the amount of work necessary for improvement made further competition unrealistic.

Kreiner, 23, is returning to the World Cup circuit but without financial or other assistance from the Canadian Ski Association.

She says she is unhappy with the regimentation of team life and having to undergo the same training program as the junior, less-able team members.

Ranked among the top giant slalom and downhill competitors in the world, Kreiner now will have to finance her own way on the tour and handle her own physical and mental conditioning for the competition.

"She's a bit of a free spirit and wants to be the master of her own destiny," team coach Currie Chapman said.

Drever leads Island squad

Sandy Drever scored all three goals Tuesday night as a Vancouver Island over-30 representative squad topped the University of Iowa 3-1 in an exhibition women's field hockey game at Oak Bay Oval.

Earlier in the day, Iowa crushed Vancouver Island's B.C. Summer Games team, 7-0.

Blues break out in Salem slugfest

SALEM, Ore. — Victoria Blues batters exploded for 19 hits and as many runs Tuesday night, outslugging Salem Senators 19-10 in a Northwest League baseball game.

Playing-manager Jim Gattis and playing-coach Barry Moss each contributed three hits and four RBIs in the slugfest, while Paul Stevens of the Blues had four hits and knocked in three runs.

Blues, who enjoy a break in the schedule tonight, are now 36-24. They went into the game two lengths behind Northern Division leading Bellingham Mariners.

Blues return home against Grays Harbor Loggers Thursday and Friday. The teams will play doubleheaders both days, each starting at 6 p.m.

(Standings page 17)

LaPointe signs pact

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Defenceman Rick LaPointe and right winger Blair Chapman have signed new contracts with St. Louis Blues, Emile Francis, president of the National Hockey League team, has announced.

Terms of the agreements were not disclosed.

A four-year veteran, Chapman came to the Blues from Pittsburgh on a trade and had 25 goals and 26 assists for 51 points last season.

LaPointe, acquired last June, was one of only three Blues' players to appear in all 80 games last season, when he ranked second among team defencemen with six goals and 19 assists for 25 points. He played with Victoria Cougars.

Shift changes bring grievance

When the Times-Colonist begins publication Sept. 2 as a replacement for The Daily Colonist and the Victoria Times, many employees will face shift changes that are a violation of the contract, the Victoria Newspaper Guild said Tuesday.

The union told Victoria Press management that it is invoking the grievance procedure in connection with the new starting times for newsroom and circulation employees.

The argument is based on a contract clause that says there shall be no change in starting times without prior written notice and full consultation with the guild and that the change cannot take place until three months after such notice.

The only exception is mutual agreement on some other arrangement.

The guild says there was no consultation. The first indication that changes might be expected came with the announcement Aug. 1 that the two papers were merging.

The International Typographical Union and the Printing Pressman's Union are both challenging layoffs that have been ordered in connection with the merger.

The ITU is seeking arbitration and the pressman's union, acting on behalf of displaced stereotypers, is using the grievance procedure.

Management is planning 59 editorial, typographical, pressroom and other layoffs for the end of this month as a result of the amalgamation of the newspapers.

Group seeks park for Moresby Island

QUEEN CHARLOTTE CITY (CP) — A conservation society here says a $2 contribution by all Canadians would enable Moresby Island to be saved from logging and turned into a national park.

"The sale of ITT's Rayonier to three B.C. companies is a golden opportunity for the federal and provincial governments to get together and make a national park of this wonderful area," Thom Henley, Islands Protection Society spokesman, said in a telephone interview from this island community, about 800 kilometres northwest of Vancouver.

He was referring to the $420-million purchase announced last week by three B.C. forest firms of the Rayonier Canada division of the U.S.-based ITT Industries of Canada Ltd.

The society has sent out a number of telegrams in an attempt to delay the sale until a possible park purchase can be arranged.

The society has been campaigning against Rayonier's plans to log much of Moresby Island, one of the Charlotte group, and wants its virgin timber preserved for public recreation.

Henlet said Moresby represents about 10 per cent of the land included in the three tree farm licences which are part of the sale.

"So we could say that the purchase price for Moresby is $42 million," Henley said. "And we think that's a cheap price to pay for such a wonderful area.

"If every Canadian contributed $2 we could buy back this land for a park."

The society has sent telegrams to provincial Forests Minister Tom Waterland asking him to delay approval of the whole sale, or at least the licence on Moresby Island and other pleas to provincial Environment Minister Stephen Rogers, chairman of the environment and land use committee secretariat and Skeena MP Jim Fulton.

It has also sent a telegram to Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau advising him of the sale because the department of national parks has long been interested in the possibility of a park on Moresby Island.

"This sale means that Moresby can finally be saved or else it will be the end of the island as a recreation area, because if the new owners build new mills, then all the timber will be logged," Henley said.

B.C. Forest Products Ltd., Whonnock Industries Ltd. and Doman Industries Ltd. are the three B.C. firms taking over Rayonier.

Hydro 3 month loss at $15M

VANCOUVER (CP) — B.C. Hydro and Power Authority has announced that high interest costs and seasonal variations in electric and gas revenues accounted for a loss of $15 million in the three months ended June 30.

Hydro said the results compare with a first-quarter loss in 1979 of $2 million. That figure has been adjusted to reflect the April transfer of Hydro's transit division to new Victoria and Vancouver agencies.

Revenues rose to $219 million in the first quarter of 1980 from $193.4 million in the corresponding period in 1979. Electric revenues accounted for $23 million of the increase.

Expenses totalled $234 million in the first quarter of 1980, up 20 per cent from the $195 million reported in the same period in 1979.

Interest charged to operations increased 26 per cent in the first quarter to $91.7 million, grants and school taxes jumped 17 per cent to $20.2 million and depreciation was up 14 per cent to $34.2 million, primarily because of plants brought into service in 1979, Hydro said.

Grants go with fowls

Agriculture Minister Jim Hewitt said Tuesday Pan Ready Poultry is the potential buyer for the financially-troubled Maplewood Poultry plant in Abbotsford.

Hewitt said Pan Ready had earlier offered to buy Maplewood when the provincial government was looking for a Canadian buyer.

If the deal goes through, the B.C. government would put up $1.5 million in grants and loan guaranteee, while the federal government would pitch in $3.75 million and the turkey producers $300,000.

Pan Ready would pay the remainder of the nearly $8 million price tag for the poultry processing firm.

Skin woes in all jobs

CHICAGO (UPI) — Career women may suffer as many skin problems as housewives who wash dishes and scrub floors, a cosmetics firm says.

The skin of airline stewardesses can become dry and cracked because of constant changes in temperature and pressurized airplane cabins. Smoke-filled rooms and copy machines can cause problems for office workers.

Women who work in nearly every kind of job — from door-to-door sales to hair dressing — are exposed to various conditions that will cause complexion problems, researchers for Syd Simons Cosmetics Inc. said.

Seymour may be an oaf, but he's star material

SAUK RAPIDS, Minn. (UPI) — Seymour the cat, a feline with a habit of being in the wrong place at the wrong time, is going to Hollywood.

And if Seymour is lucky, he'll be the spokescat for a cat food.

Iris Johnson, Sauk Rapids entered two of her cats in a contest last winter sponsored by Meow Mix to find a new cat to appear on the company's television commercials.

Neither she nor her husband, Earl, thought much about it until a telephone call in July. Mrs. Johnson's cat was one of three nationwide finalists and she and her husband — and the cat — would be flown to Hollywood for a meow test.

There was only one problem. They had to find a substitute cat.

She had filled out the names of two female barn cats, Hazel and Fehra.

"Hazel has kittens about as often as she can have them," Mrs. Johnson said. "And she's just had a litter. And Fehra is about to pop with one herself."

So they thought of Seymour, owned by the Johnsons' son and daughter-in-law.

The 8-year-old Seymour has one of his front paws in a cast as a result of a confrontation with a trap that broke three toes. He also spent time in the fluff cycle of a clothes dryer.

But Mrs. Johnson noted he won't get pregnant and he's got a much louder meow, — especially when anyone nears his broken toe.

Before the judge

Two more American fishermen appeared in provincial court Tuesday after being caught gillnetting in Canadian waters.

Gilbert Naylor, skipper of the Laurie Ann, was fined $500 and forfeited a catch worth more than $500 after being found over the line near Constance Bank early Tuesday morning by the fisheries patrol vessel Crescent Rock.

Naylor said he was surprised to learn he was two miles into Canadian waters. His radar was not working, but he was using his fathometer because the bottom drops sharply right at the line. The tide apparently pushed him over the line, he said.

Larry White, skipper of the Joey J, was fined $500 and forfeited a catch worth more than $1,000 after the patrol found him 2½ miles inside the boundary.

White, who has no radar, had been warned Sunday about being over the line, and claimed he made a special effort Monday night to stay away from the boundary, but the tide proved deceptive.

Judge Harold Alder gave both men one month to pay their fines.

Kenneth R. Kinnie, 35, of Colwood, was given consecutive six-month and three-month sentences for leaving the scene of an accident and driving while impaired.

A vehicle driven by Kinnie struck another vehicle on July 31, and Kinnie backed up and drove away. Police located his vehicle from a description given by the other driver and found Kinnie nearby with the keys to the vehicle. His breathalyzer reading was .21.

The court was told Kinnie had a long-standing drinking problem, and that his case was complicated by charges in other jurisdictions.

Alder recommended the jail term include treatment at the Allouette River alcoholic treatment centre.

Allan L. Wedman, 42, of 4113 Quadra, was fined $400, given six months probation, and told to take the impaired drivers' course after he gave breathalyzer readings of .38. (A reading of over .08 is considered impairment.)

Wedman was found July 25 slumped over the wheel of his pickup in the middle of Wallace Drive, with a bottle of vodka on the seat beside him.

"A little bit crazy, I guess," Wedman said when asked to comment on his case.

Allan Whitequill, no fixed address, was sentenced to nine months in jail for impersonation.

Whitequill found a withdrawal slip on the ground and attempted to withdraw $800 from the bank on which it was drawn. Bank employees became suspicious and called police when his signature did not match that of the account holder, and when Whitequill could not produce proper identification.

The court was told Whitequill has a long criminal record for robbery, theft, breaking and entering, and possession of stolen property and that he had been sentenced to 12 months in prison last September.

Defence counsel John Hills said Whitequill has been an alcoholic since the age of 16, but has been sober since Aug. 5, which is a long time by his own standards. Alcohol figured in all his previous crimes, Hills said. Only in B.C. for three months, Whitequill has made a strong effort to get a job, and to receive alcoholism counselling, but was ineligible for social assistance and had to live on the street. At the time of his arrest, he was desperate for money, Hills said.

Alder said Whitequill was the kind of person who "has spent a good deal of time inside, and finds it difficult on the outside." He recommended that part of Whitequill's term be spent at Allouette River.

Harry D. Berreth, 25, of 614 Nelson, was sentenced to six months in jail for theft under $200 after his wallet was found on the front seat of a pickup from which a Citizens' Band radio and padlock had been stolen.

Police found the radio in his home. His lawyer said the fact Berreth left his wallet on the seat was evidence of how intoxicated he had been. Alcohol has been a factor in almost all of Berreth's previous offences, which include convictions for possession of stolen property and robbery.

"He may have an alcohol problem, but he also has a moral problem in picking up others' property," Alder said in handing out sentence.

Ernst Stricker, 22, of no fixed address, was ordered to move back with his parents and do 150 hours of community service after being charged with possession of marijuana.

The court was told police found Stricker living in the bush near Downey Road in North Saanich. He had eight marijuana plants and a package of seeds in his knapsack.

Stricker led police to a makeshift greenhouse, near which was a planter with 42 marijuana plants. He told the police he was growing the plants "for something to do," but denied knowing they were marijuana.

Suspended term given rifleman

VANCOUVER (CP) — A 53-year-old man who held Vancouver police at bay with a rifle for almost two hours June 16 was given a suspended sentence in court Tuesday and placed on 18 months probation.

Harry Ernest Wharton, who earlier pleaded guilty to unlawful possession of a firearm after firing several shots from the balcony of his rooming house suite, was also ordered by Judge Gerald Coultas to attend an alcoholic treatment centre for a period not exceeding nine months.

During the trial, court was told Wharton suffered a series of traumatic personal events that contributed to his desperate action.

Crown witnesses said Wharton was not aiming his rifle at anyone in particular and that he warned people on the street to leave the area.

Nursing courses to expand

A provincial government refresher course for nurses aimed at easing staff shortages in Victoria will be expanded to other parts of B.C. where the need exists, Health Minister Rafe Mair said Tuesday.

The ministry had conducted the refresher course at Royal Jubilee Hospital in an effort to combat the perennial problem of nursing shortages during the summer months.

The government picked up the tab for the course and, in turn, applicants have to make a work commitment at the hospital on a casual or regular basis.

Mair would like to see the course adopted by all hospitals, but says he does not want to see it used as a replacement for an active recruiting program.

Demonstrators halt Hydro spray truck

NELSON (CP) — About 40 demonstrators blocked a B.C. Hydro truck Tuesday, halting a herbicide spraying program to clear foliage along power line right-of-ways near Fauquier.

No arrests were made.

The protesters complained the government-owned corporation has not given the community, about 40 kilometres north of Castlegar, proper notification of the spraying program. They said they fear Tordon 101 and Tordon 10-K will contaminate local water supplies.

A Fauquier-area cattle rancher also protested against the spraying at a hydro office in Vernon Tuesday. Residents are concerned the herbicide could poison cattle which graze under the transmission lines.

Blake Tweddle, hydro transmission maintenance supervisor, said in a telephone interview from Vernon he thought a notice in the weekly Vernon Advertiser was sufficient warning to Fauquier residents that the program was proceeding.

However, he said a billing dispute the newspaper was engaged in may have prevented the paper from reaching the community. He could not say why B.C. Hydro had not placed a notice in the local weekly paper.

Harry Cox, area pesticide control inspector, said from Kelowna he didn't know why anyone would protest against the spraying and called the demonstrators "kooks."

Tweddle said B.C. Hydro likely will delay the project, which involves about 55 kilometres of right-of-ways from Cherryville to near Edgewood. The corporation may discuss using mechanical means rather than chemicals to defoliate evergreen and deciduous trees.

Recycling trial

Gordon Head has been chosen for a garbage recycling project under which residents will be asked to separate newspapers, cans and glass into special bins.

Ald. Howard Sturrock told Saanich council this week the nine-month pilot project involving 2,000 homes will start Sept. 30. Pickups will be every two weeks.

Saanich has applied to the provincial government for a grant to cover the cost of the new bins.

Aldermen also approved a one-year contract for Betsy Sweeney, 3 - 66 Moss, as municipal recycling co-ordinator at a wage of $11 per hour for no more than 21 hours a week.

Taking the sting out of the killers

By AB KENT

Dr. Mark Winston makes a point about killer bees by stripping down to his shorts and handling them.

Winston, one of a group of researchers on a U.S.-financed killer bee team working in South America, told an audience of beekeepers Tuesday at the University of Victoria the gesture has a message.

It shows that killer bees are not always bad, that simple precautions can be taken and that the truth about the bees lies somewhere between fact and fancy.

Winston, a Simon Fraser University biologist, is attending the annual conference of the Western Apicultural Society.

He has just returned from a two-month visit to South American regions where aggressive, Africanized bees have been a growing problem for more than 20 years.

Introduced to Brazil as an experiment in 1956, they escaped and have been the object of study and some wild publicity since 1972.

While a graduate student at the University of Kansas, Winston was a member of a team sent to South America in 1975 by the U.S. department of agriculture and National Science Foundation.

The group stayed for three years tracing the progress of killer bees through French Guiana, Venezuela and Peru.

Winston says he finds the "killer" tag unfortunate although the bees can be aggressive and do cause the death of many people in the honey industry — as many as 40 in one six-month period in Venezuela.

Bee behavior is extremely variable and some bees are no problem. Their stings are no different than European bees, but under some circumstances attacks can be massive.

As with other bees, killer bee venom contains a chemical that attracts other bees to sting and in such an attack, a person or animal can be literally stung to death if hundreds join in.

The bees have been moving northward from Brazil at a rate of 200-300 miles a year and are now near the Panama-Colombia border.

In all likelihood, the killer bees will have passed through Central America and be in the southern U.S. by 1988-90, Winston said.

'Killer' tag unfortunate, says Winston

The northern limit of their range will likely be upper California, due to temperature and climatic conditions, Winston believes, unless the killer bees are deliberately introduced.

"Some beekeepers have the misguided impression they want these bees. They've heard they are good honey producers. But it's not true."

Winston said the Africanized bees are not heavy producers, although the original idea of importing the African species was to create a vigorous but gentle bee to improve honey output.

Due to carelessness, 26 of the original colonies escaped into the wild with spectacular results.

Where there were virtually no wild bee populations in the Brazilian jungle, there are today 10-15 million colonies.

When queens from managed hives leave the colony to mate it is likely they will do so with an African bee, Winston said.

They will nest almost anywhere, in closed or open places, hanging from tree limbs, from buildings, in sewer manholes, in homes. The bees will colonize furniture or a corner of a room, apparently unconcerned about human presence.

Even Devil's Island, lying 10 to 15 miles offshore, has been colonized by the aggressive strain.

"These bees are everywhere. When you walk down a street it is hard not to find a colony," Winston said.

"These bees are mean, no doubt about it."

But he stresses that small colonies are not hard to handle and collecting swarms is not dangerous.

However, large swarms and groups of colonies such as in a commercial operation can be dangerous. The most dangerous time is usually when the keeper wants to work them, Winston said.

Sometimes hives can be aroused by simply walking past and the excitement is contagious.

When an entire apiary is stirred up, people within a range of about half a kilometre are subject to hundreds of stings and unless they manage to outrun the bees, have no protection.

However, this hazard can be minimized by spacing hives on individual stands to separate them, by using plenty of smoke when handling the bees and by wearing protective gear.

Bee-killing squads, usually trained firemen or apiculturists, seek out wild colonies at a rate of 10-15 a night in some South American cities.

Winston said the impact of aroused killer bees should be less in the U.S. than in South America because of better husbandry methods.

For beekeepers, the recommended and most effective solution to the killer bee problem is the removal of the queen from each colony and the substitution of a domestic variety.

A distant prospect is chemical control of killer bees but much research remains to be done first, Winston said.

Meanwhile other North American scientists might address themselves to the therapeutic value of bee venom, he suggested.

European researchers have found this is very promising in arthritis treatment. It is not a cure-all, but it can be useful in certain circumstances.

Ratio-algae story unfolding in Regina tap?

REGINA (CP) — Ask most Regina residents about their drinking water, and they screw up their faces, stick out their tongues and tell you "it's hopeless."

For years, residents have been plagued with water that smells foul and tastes worse. But this year the problem seems to be particularily odorous, says Wayne Masson, water and sewer engineer for the city.

The problem appears to be an over-abundant algae growth in shallow Buffalo Pound Lake, the city's water supply, about 70 kilometres west of Regina.

Masson said the city has hired a Calgary firm specializing in water treatment, to conduct water tests in an attempt to identify a solution to the problem.

He said possible suggestions could include modifications to the existing filtration plant at the lake, changes in the chemicals used in the plant or the addition of carbon filters in the system.

He explained that carbon filters would probably be the best means of freeing the water from its offending taste and odor because they work on an adhesion principle.

The filters, placed inside the pipes carrying water, would "absorb the taste and odor."

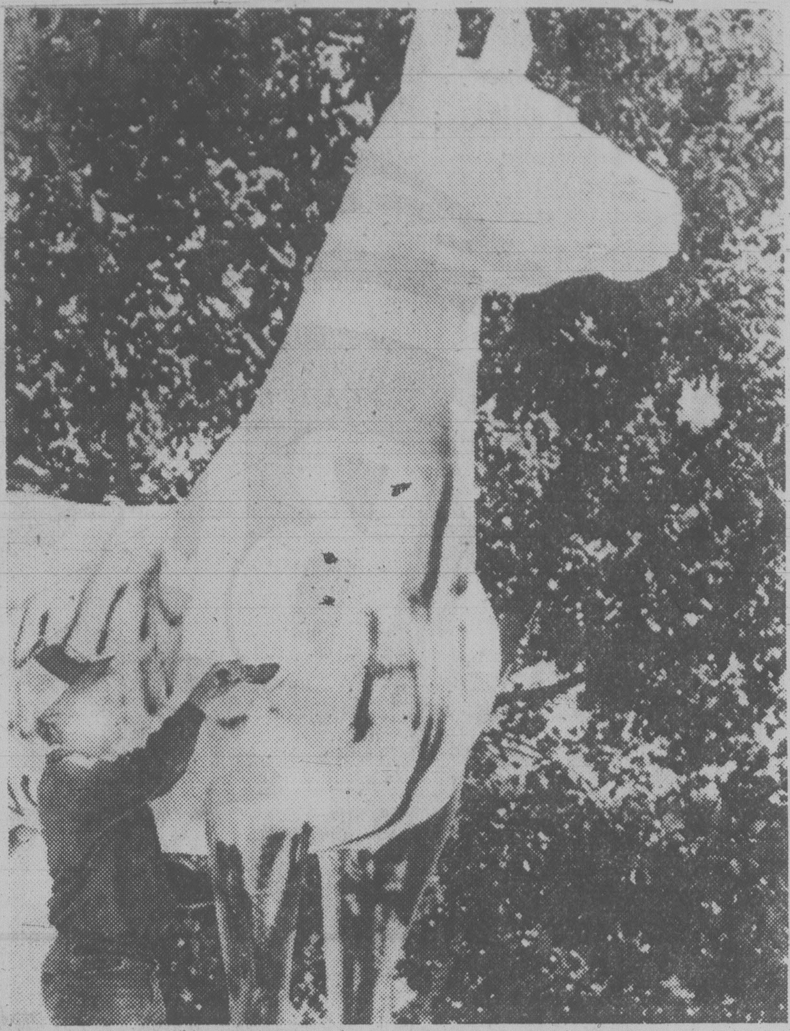
As for modifying the actual workings of the plant, Masson said it would be difficult to "start modifications on a plant of that size quickly or effectively."

However, he said city council and administration are "ready and prepared to move on any recommendations quickly" if the studies indicate the need for plant modifications.

The safety of the drinking water has been questioned by residents. But Mike Markewich, chief inspector for environmental health, says the water is "bacterially and chemically safe."

Professor Roy Cullimore, in charge of water studies at the University of Regina, said algae growth is only one possible explanation for the foul water.

He said chlorine used to treat the water could cause odor and taste problems. Organisms growing in the pipes transporting the water could also be causing problems.



HORSE PAINTER George Bulawka, a Manitoba parks employee, covers the work of vandals who sprayed messages on well-known landmark beside Trans-Canada Highway just west of Winnipeg. The statue recalls legend of white horse whose spirit reputedly still gallops around surrounding plain.

Help on the way for sled-dog plan

By MARY TORTOSA

EDMONTON (CP) — The government of the Northwest Territories says it will not allow the destruction of 120 purebred Eskimo breeding dogs because of a lack of money to continue the project.

Terry Bolt, executive assistant to Economic Development Minister George Braden, said both the legislative assembly and members of the territorial government's executive committee support the idea of finding a long-term financial solution to keep the five-year-old Eskimo Dog Research Foundation in Yellowknife operating.

Foundation director William Carpenter has said he will be forced to destroy the animals unless funding is available.

However, the federally-operated Agriculture and Rural Development Agency, administered by Braden's department, is expected to consider a $200,000-application Sept. 9 to continue operating the program for the next two years.

If the agency decides against supplying the necessary funding, Ms. Bolt said in a telephone interview from Whitehorse, the territorial government will provide more interim financial assistance and investigate other sources of monetary support.

"Definitely, the dogs will not be shot," she said. "We have contingency plans and will keep on providing interim assistance until the problem is solved."

The department has already pledged to supply 26,000 pounds of fish to sustain the kennels until mid-September.

The program is designed to restore the strength of the Eskimo dog breed and to produce a registered line. Northern communities have returned to using the dogs as a replacement for snowmobiles because of the high costs of energy.

But Carpenter, who masterminded the project in 1975 when the dogs were "almost all but forgotten and near extinction," said another problem is manpower.

For the last three years, much of the manpower needed to look after the animals has been provided by volunteer programs such as the national youth organization Katimavik and summer youth employment programs. But Carpenter said at least five paid full-time staff are needed.

He said the $200,000 being sought would cover the cost of food and salaries for the next two years. The 146,000 pounds of raw meat and fish consumed by the dogs costs about $35,000 a year.

Carpenter said the foundation has already provided 150 purebred Eskimo dogs free to northern outposts and now it is the government's responsibility to step in and pay its share.

That is why the foundation is currently holding 30 pups headed for the northern outposts, he said.

"We can't afford the cost of transportation and we can't keep depending on free rides from Pacific Western Airlines."

Until now, funding for the project has come from private corporations and individuals, Canada Council grants and his own pocket.

In studying the purebred Eskimo dog, Carpenter has concluded the animals can go several days without food, drawing up to 120 pounds while in harness. Properly-fed teams have been known to haul 110 pounds each on journeys lasting 40 days and covering up to 70 kilometres.

Farmers union fights for rails

SASKATOON (CP) — The National Farmers Union (NFU) has come out against any further rail line abandonment in a submission presented to Transport Minister Jean-Luc Pepin in Ottawa.

The submission, presented by NFU president James Mayne, criticized the federal government's policy toward rail abandonment and toward the statutory Crow rate on grain.

The NFU says disruptions in the rail line system should not go beyond the recommendations contained in the Hall report on grain handling. The union says statistics indicate five-year average receipts of grain were higher on 32 of 40 rail lines compared to 10-year averages, indicating farmers have not abadoned the rail lines.

Sask. line's fate in balance

WALDHEIM, Sask. (CP) — The future of the Canadian National Railways Carlton subdivision should be decided sometime within the next 30 days, J. M. McDonough, member of the Canadian transport commission, said this week.

McDonough reserved judgment after taking several submissions at a hearing attended by more than 250 people. The subdivision, north of Saskatoon, consists of 57.5 kilometres of track running between the towns of Dalmeny and Carlton.

Turtle-training tips offered

BOISEVAN, Man. (UPC) — You've got to be tough to turn a thoroughbred turtle into a winner.

"We threaten to turn them into ashtrays if they should happen to lose," said turtle trainer Bruce Clipenstein, after his turtle Leanne's Lilliputian broke the wire to win the Canadian Turtle Racing Championship.

Clipenstein also noted the importance of diet to creating a champion turtle.

"Most of the time we feed them a diet of lettuce and onions, but of course if they win the big races we feed them steak and beefheart," Clipenstein said.

Clipenstein knows what he's talking about. The Calgary native has won the Canadian Championships twice before with turtles running out of his Clip and Beatty Stables and is the only owner of two world champion turtles — Spike, who won in 1977, and Soupy Sales, the 1978 champ.

Lung worms fail to faze sheep

CALGARY (CP) — Wardens at a wildlife sanctuary west of Calgary have been trying to scare about 40 blase sheep into traditional high-altitude pastures.

But the sheep, used to scores of backpackers and to tourists gawking from cars in the recreation area known as Kananaskis Country, have confined themselves to reacting with stares as the wardens wildly fire shotguns and rifles into the air.

About 40 of the big horn sheep at the sanctuary have decided to eschew the 1,000-metre climb to their usual summer range.

But summer grasses at the Sheep River sanctuary harbor millions of pinhead-sized land snails, which in turn harbor lungworms.

No more free booze from city

LETHBRIDGE (CP) — There will be no more free drinking at the city's expense following city council's decision Monday to stop paying for alcohol at civic affairs, said Ald. Bill Kergan.

"I think the taxpayers will be pleased to learn we are not spending their money on bottles of rye," said Kergan.

Also, council will hire consultants to study the possibility of extending Lethbridge's boundaries by 4.8 kilometres in all directions, quadrupling the size of the city.

Phoney sex hormones used to fool male bugs

By Steve Mertl

LETHBRIDGE, Alta. (CP) — Chemical insecticides have gained a bad reputation because of their toxic nature so researchers are looking at ways to hoodwink the insects into controlling themselves.

Dr. Dean Struble is handling one of a number of long-term North American programs to test the effectiveness of synthetic pheromones in monitoring and to some extent controlling insects by fooling males into thinking they can mate.

Pheromones are the sex hormones female insects produce during mating season designed to attract only males of their own species.

"He actually smells these components in the air via nerve receptors that are in his antenna," says Struble, a chemist.

Struble's team has been concentrating on the Bertha army worm, currently plaguing rapeseed farmers in Alberta but the method is being applied to all kinds of crops, including a large program to control pests infesting cotton fields in southern Texas.

Struble starts by catching female moths (adult army worms) and extracting the glands which produce the hormones. Samples are put through a gas chromatograph to pinpoint individual chemicals in the hormones, which show up as a jagged line on the machine's chart.

Then researchers amputate the antennae from male moths and hook them to an amplifier. The graph produced when the antennae are exposed to the hormones is compared with the line made by the hormones themselves and the crucial chemicals in the compound show up as matching zigzags on the two graphs.

"Once you're sure these components are the same as the ones in the female then it's a matter of taking however many you find, putting them back in the blend and testing it in the field," says Struble.

Army worm pheromones contain 13 active chemicals which can be synthesized to produce the same blend as the natural sex hormone.

Minute amounts of the compound are put into traps and placed in fields to attract amorous males. A couple of drops daubed on an applicator will last for weeks.

The main aim of the program is to chart the presence of army worm moths by measuring the number of males caught in a trap. The figures give some idea of how many eggs will be laid by females on vulnerable plants. They hatch into larvae which feed on the crops, hibernate over the winter and become moths in the spring.

Monitoring gives farmers advance warning of the potential size of an infestation, cutting down on indiscriminate spraying and unreasonably high levels of toxic insecticide on crops.

But pheromones are also good for direct control of pests in a limited application. Struble says they have been especially successful on low-acreage, high-cash crops, such as fruit.

"If you use a low concentration of synthetic pheromone in the field then the male doesn't know whether it's synthetic or a female, so he can't find any females. That way the female goes unmated."

So far Struble's research has been funded almost exclusively through Ottawa but he hopes the Alberta government might come up with some grant money for a Canadian chemical firm to prepare synthetic pheromones on a large scale for the commercial market.

Pheromones are largely non-toxic and probably difficult for insects to cope with. While many are able to adapt to harsh chemical insecticides, Struble believes it might be possible to keep pace with insects trying to adapt their habits to avoid being fooled by phoney sex hormones.

"We have instruments sensitive enough to do pheromone identification on one or two females, so we can keep ahead of it," he says.

13-metre omelet

ST. FELIX-DE-VALOIS, Que. (CP) — Residents of this rural community northeast of Montreal call their town the poultry capital of Quebec.

But that, apparently, wasn't recognition enough.

World-wide attention was what they wanted, so they decided to put St. Felix on the map. A world record, they figured, would be just the right thing.

And so they recently created what they're sure is the world's largest omelet.

In just 40 minutes, 8,000 residents helped 30 egg-breakers throw 15,112 eggs together to fashion a giant three-by-13 metre breakfast weighing 910 kilograms.

Local notary J. Edgar Laquerre witnessed the event and sent a signed affidavit to the Guinness Book of World Records asking recognition for the world's largest omelet.

Dief: controversy lingers

By RICHARD DOYON

OTTAWA (UPC) — Canadians observed the first anniversary of the death of John Diefenbaker last week, knowing that somewhere "The Chief" must be chuckling over the controversy that still surrounds his legacy.

Questions about a secret $475,000 trust fund created for the former prime minister and the fate of his fashionable Ottawa home are unanswered a year after Diefenbaker was laid to rest at the University of Saskatchewan.

It was in the waking hours of Aug. 16, 1979 that the 83-year-old elder statesman collapsed and died of heart failure while reading on the couch in his study — triggering six days of national mourning.

In probably the most spectacular and most expensive state funeral Canada has seen, an estimated 30,000 people turned out to bid farewell to Diefenbaker as he lay in state in the Hall of Honor of his beloved Parliament.

The lavish funeral cost $289,900, including almost $200,000 for a train that carried his coffin, friends, dignitaries and reporters in a cross-country pilgrimage to his gravesite in Saskatoon beside his second wife, Olive.

A year later, the fiery Parliamentarian still evokes what sources call "intrigue" as executors of his estate and personal papers battle for control of the $1 million estate.

The estate, to eventually be divided among the university, his hometown of Prince Albert and his literary executors, was rife with charges and countercharges after the existence of the trust fund became known.

Insiders say the trust, which was endowed with $221,000 in 1960 by several influential Tories to provide financial security for John and Olive in their later years, should have accumulated more than the $250,000 it did at compounded interest during its 19-year span.

Counselled by Toronto lawyer Beverley Matthews, the four executors and the two remaining trustees refuse to answer questions about the fund that was invested initially in low interest savings bonds nearly 20 years ago.

"If the fund was invested well enough, I figure the fund should be about $350,000 larger than it really is," said one source. "It's obvious they don't want to talk about where some of the money went. There is either money missing or they are incompetent investers."

One theory was that the trustees were asked several years to transfer some of the Diefenbaker money to another trust — a $300,000 fund created for the late Claude Wagner so he could challenge Joe Clark for the Tory leadership in 1976.

The entire controversy could be settled in September when a Toronto judge conducts a "passing of accounts" to dispense with the estate. But critics believe the questions of the trust fund may never be answered.

Tucked away among the stately mansions and manicured lawns of wealthy Rockcliffe Park, Diefenbaker's home is fighting a losing battle against nature and politics to remain standing as a monument to the man.

Diefenbaker willed the 11-room home to the federal government on condition it became a museum — a permanent reminder of the former prime minister.

Purchased in 1967 for $69,000, the house has fallen into disrepair and these days only a few tourists and curious Canadians drive slowly by. The lone inhabitant is an elderly housekeeper who is reportedly "afraid of ghosts."

The paint has peeled. The backyard pool that Diefenbaker rarely used has filled with mud and debris. The once well-manicured lawn and gardens are overrun with weeds.

Inside, many of Dief's personal effects are still intact. In the den sits the desk once owned by his idol, Sir John A. Macdonald. Lining the shelves are hundreds of books, many autographed by former world leaders.

On the walls are pictures of Diefenbaker with members of the Royal Family, U.S. presidents and World War II British Field Marshall Bernard Montgomery. In a prominent place hangs the framed handwriting of Macdonald.

Last winter, long-time aide Keith Martin was given a $2,500 contract by the Clark government to study and recommend how Diefenbaker's memory should be preserved. He proposed creation of a museum and a Parliament Hill statue.

But Martin, who now works for the House of Commons staff, is bitter with the Clark government for not acting on the house.

Only a week before he died, Martin said, Diefenbaker told him the Conservative government would "never keep" the house because of the long-standing animosity between him and party leader Joe Clark.

"He had more confidence that Trudeau would accept it," Martin said. "He said Clark would never take it. If they (Clark's staff) had made up their minds last fall, that place would be open right now."

Instead, the house has been referred by the Liberal government to the obscure Historic Sites and Monument Board, within the Parks Canada branch of the environment department, for a decision expected in October.

Under its options, historic sites spokesman Larry Friend said, the board can recommend the house become a museum, a plaque be erected nearby or a monument be constructed as "appropriate form of commemoration" to the late leader.

However, he noted, only two homes of three former prime ministers have become museums: Macdonald's Kingston, Ont. homestead and Ottawa's Laurier House where Liberal prime ministers Sir Wilfrid Laurier and MacKenzie King once lived.

Mass production the key to solar heating cost

OTTAWA (CP) — Consumers "keep hearing about breakthroughs" in solar energy technology, but what really will lower the cost of solar heating systems is mass production, says Ronal Larson, a leading U.S. expert on alternate energy forms.

"The more you produce the lower the price and the lower price the more you're able to sell and then the more you're able to produce," said Larson, principal scientist for the Solar Energy Research Institute in Golden, Colo.

The institute, with a staff of 750, is the principal U.S. agency involved in basic alternative energy research. It was created in 1973 and operates on a $100 million budget.

The solar technology in which most consumers expect a breakthrough is the photo-voltaic system — pure silicon disks used on space craft to directly convert sunlight to electricity — but because of expensive and complex production techniques they are not mass-produced.

Larson said in an interview Monday that passive solar power systems — essentially a large plate-glass window allowing sunlight in and across which insulated blinds are drawn at night when stored heat is radiated back into the room — are the most economical.

But despite their low cost, few Canadian or U.S. homes are equipped with them or with solar water heaters, also relatively cheap.

However solar and other natural energy sources such as wind, hydro tidal and biomass power are just beginning to come into their own now that nuclear energy is on the skids, said Larson who visited Ottawa to discuss alternative energy systems with National Research Council scientists.

"I see it as permeating every segment of society and eventually becoming the dominant power source — the nuclear industry seems to me to be in a dying phase," Larson said. "It'll never be a power again."

Problems with radioactive waste disposal and increasing public unwillingness to accept reactors in their communities have forced utilities to reconsider their nuclear policies and governments to reconsider reactor licences.

The U.S. government wants to see 20 per cent of all its energy needs provided by solar and other alternate energy forms by the year 2000.

"I think we have an excellent chance of meeting it," he said. "And I think the Canadians have probably an even better chance given the large amount of biomass — wood and plant material used to distill ethanol for gasohol or decomposed to produce methane gas — and hydro power available."

Canada has long lagged behind other industrial countries in promoting alternate energy resources and some experts have predicted that no more than two or five per cent of the country's energy needs in the year 2000 will be met by nonconventional sources.

However, the outlook for alternate energy sources is improving.

Last year the Science Council of Canada called for a $3.8 billion program to develop those sources by 2009 and Ontario alone has planned to spend about $16 billion to increase its energy self-sufficiency by 1995.

Parliamentarians are also showing more interest.

A special Commons committee heard testimony from experts of the National Research Council and other organizations before Parliament adjourned for the summer.

Sudden drops in sun's output

PASADENA, Calif. (UPI) — Scientists say they have evidence that the sun's energy output has dropped briefly but significantly twice in the last few months, a finding that could influence theories about ice ages.

Richard C. Wilson, of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory, said that a sensor on the Solar Maximum Mission satellite detected evidence that the sun "took a nosedive" on April 4 and reduced its energy output by .2 per cent.

He said the energy level stayed down for the next four days and then began to climb back to normal. Between May 24 and 29 the sun's energy output again fell by .2 per cent.

"Two-tenths might not seem like much in a lot of other fields," Wilson said, "but it represents a huge amount of energy from the sun. If the earth goes without that much sun for a long time, say, a century or so, it could have profound climatic effects on the planet."

Some scientists have theorized that ice ages are caused by periods of extreme cooling due to forces entirely within the earth itself. Others have argued for extra-terrestrial causes such as variations in solar radiation.

Scientists have calculated that if the sun's output were to decline by just 1 per cent for a period of 100 years, it would reduce the earth's mean global temperature by about 2 degrees Fahrenheit over that time.

So-called "little ice ages" have occurred when the temperature dropped between 1 ½ and 4 degrees Fahrenheit and "great ice ages" have occurred when the temperature fell around 10 degrees.

$4 million Ontario school aims to turn landlubbers into sailors

MORRISBURG, Ont. (CP) — Although it's located on terra firma, Canada's first school for sailors is promising a tough shake-down cruise for its 24 charter students.

"Here is where they'll find out if they can take it," says Gerry Beaulieu, administrator of the Seafarers Training Institute which opened its doors Monday.

For nine weeks, the trainees — many hailing from high schools and colleges across the country — must make do without liquor, money, status jewelry and unauthorized trips off the school's 131-acre grounds, about 160 kilometres west of Montreal.

Instead they'll be learning the skills required of a sailor, from splicing ropes and reading engine gauges to lifeboat drills and galley cooking.

Marks are based on a demerit point system. Two points are subtracted for insubordination, for example, and a student's future at the school is put under review after five lost points.

"Discipline is a reward for work well done," explains Beaulieu. "It's doing things the correct way."

While there's no guarantee of a job upon completion of the course, Beaulieu says a graduate "would be preferred over a non-union person" and stands to earn as much as $20,000 during a full season as a deckhand on the Great Lakes.

The institute, a joint venture of Canadian shipping companies and the Seafarers International Union, operates on a $800,000 budget from a long, low building characterized by wide porthole-like windows.

The $4-million building features its own nursing station, auditorium, gymnasium, library, recreation centre and a galley which resembles a modern hotel kitchen. Outside are three lifeboats, and plans are to acquire a stationary ship for practice purposes.

Tuition, room and board is free, but getting admitted is tough. The school already has some 1,000 applications on file.

Besides basic training for would-be sailors, the institute offers an eight-week session for seasoned mariners to polish their skills and learn a few new tricks.

"Anyone who has gone through a training course . . . can't help but be a better seaman," said Capt. Leath Davis of Hall Corp., a major Great Lakes carrier.

"On board ship it's impossible to start training them in safety matters right away."

Premiers far apart on big issues

By MARY JANIGAN
FP News Service

OTTAWA — This Friday, after two days of talks, the provincial premiers will issue a communique that will prattle on about great progress and even greater understanding among the country's 10 junior governments.

The premiers will flaunt lists of all the lesser items — ranging from interprovincial trucking to Senate reform — that they have decided to stop fighting about.

They will shake hands and smile. They will pose for photos. And then maybe one or two of the flock will admit that — on the brink of a crucial federal-provincial constitutional conference — the 10 premiers have rarely been further apart on almost every major issue. They cannot, in fact, even agree to a request for no unilateral federal constitutional action until they do agree.

It will be marvellously polite war with Ontario at one end of the spectrum and Alberta on the other. The remaining provinces will be closer to Alberta on most of the major issues. The sides will naturally shift slightly as the premiers move from constitutional talks to the economy and on to energy. But it's a sure bet that the traditional enemy — Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau and the federal government — will be almost overlooked in the domestic squabbling.

"I doubt that there will be peace and harmony this time," sighs an Ontario official. "There will be no provincial consensus and then an agreement of 'Let's go see the feds' — the way everyone did before.

"This time there's agreement on many issues but it just happens that resources and economic powers are the big issues and there's no agreement there."

The premiers commence this two-day-long argument in Winnipeg tomorrow with their 21st annual conference. Former Quebec premier Jean Lesage launched the mini-summits in 1960 so everyone could get acquainted over a few beers. In recent years, the gatherings have mixed cocktails with caucusing and usually produced some major agreements. In 1978, for example, the premiers called for — and eventually secured — constitutional talks that zeroed in on the division of powers.

This year's session, however, kicks off with an explosive constitutional wrangle that will probably not be solved. Most provinces want the new constitution to spell out loud and clear that they own their resources. The feds say that the provinces can only secure this control if they agree to a clause which prohibits "any provincial law or practice which, directly or indirectly, unduly impedes free interprovincial trade."

This is a key issue. Ontario sides with the federal government, arguing that "Canada is one country and must have one economy — not 10". New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island and maybe even Manitoba agree.

Provinces such as Saskatchewan and Quebec and Newfoundland are adamantly on the other side. Saskatchewan Attorney General Roy Romanow, the co-chairman of the constitutional talks, is slated to brief the premiers Thursday morning. Last week he denounced the federal measure with the warning that provinces "would be emasculated in their efforts to control their economies."

These provinces say the courts should not be ruling on their domestic economic policies. They also propose that everyone should simply agree with the principle of economic union and then conduct an ongoing review to see how well the union is working. Officials have been struggling with compromise suggestions that a new Senate could monitor the problem. No one is very happy with that option and few premiers are likely to soften their stands.

There are other major problems and clashes to add to the premiers' woes.

To begin with, the Big Ten had vowed to avoid mixing their three major areas of discussion. That now seems unavoidable.

On the constitutional resource issue, for example, most provinces will likely endorse Alberta's bid to grab clear-cut control over natural resources. These provinces do not want an export tax on natural gas and they do not like the idea that the feds can unilaterally set oil prices. Ontario, however, says that the federal government should be involved to ensure that the benefits are fairly shared among all Canadians.

This squabble means, of course, that the premiers will not agree on another key constitutional clause. It also means that when the premiers start their energy talks, the argument will just keep on raging. Provinces such as Quebec will want to pass a resolution which asks the feds to respect the rights of provinces over resources and to shun an export tax. Provinces such as Ontario will not be able to agree. More quarrels.

The premiers also have to face the fact that pollsters say that Trudeau now has the approval of 57 per cent of the Canadian population and that 78 per cent of Canadians say that Canada should have its own constitution. So they realize that too much criticism of the federal government could be dismissed as ranting. Manitoba Premier Sterling Lyon, for example, prudently toned down several communiques last week to avoid the appearance of bashing the feds. On major issues where consensus can be achieved — without Ontario — the premiers have to carefully shun stridency.

Finally, the premiers have an enormous amount of horsetrading to endure as each premier pushes his favorite cause.

For all of these reasons, the Big Ten are likely to be smiling through clenched teeth on Friday. They will likely have agreed to joint stands on the Supreme Court, the Senate, family law and communications.

They will also likely endorse British Columbia Premier Bill Bennett's call for a federal-provincial finance ministers' conference this fall. In the face of double-digit inflation and the near certainty of no economic growth, they want to look like they are doing something.

Nonetheless, on the big issues, the 10 aren't likely to get very far.

Lake Erie shaken

GOLDEN, Colo. (AP) — A minor earthquake shook the western end of Lake Erie today, and the tremor was felt in the Detroit area, the U.S. Geological Survey said.

There were no reports of damage, said Don Finley, a USGA spokesman.

The quake registered 3.0 on the Richter scale and occurred at 5:35 a.m. EDT, seismographs at the survey's National Earthquake Information Service here showed.

The quake occurred in the same general area as did a Feb. 2, 1976, quake having a magnitude of 3.4. Finley said that it also was felt in the Detroit area, but which did not cause any damage.

'Arab' scam nips Canadians

VANCOUVER (CP) — Canadians are among an international roster of investors bilked of $25,000 each after falling for a fraud artist posing as a front man for Arab oil interests.

Complaints have been received from Nova Scotia, Manitoba and British Columbia, said Insp. Tony Kozij of the RCMP commercial crime squad in a telephone interview from Ottawa.

However, only two residents of Salmon Arm appear to have actually parted with any money.

The Canadians join scores of other victims in Belgium, Holland, Australia and the U.S.

Albert Colby, 59, of Newport Beach, Calif., has been arrested in connection with the scheme and now faces 67 charges ranging from grand theft to illegal sale of securities.

Investigators allege Colby presented himself as a representative of a bogus company called Arab Capital Funding and claimed to be seeking investment opportunities for up to $500 million in Middle East oil money.

Letters were written to business organizations such as chambers of commerce recruiting agents to help find appropriate investments and baited with promises of finder's fees averaging $6,000 for every deal they helped to strike.

The sting came when agents were asked to show their sincerity by putting up $25,000 in advance.

John Fitz Gibbons, executive director of the B.C. Chamber of Commerce, said his organization was among those approached.

"I wrote ACF in Los Angeles and said thanks, we're interested and asked them to supply some information — like the name of their bank, the company officers, the company's Dun and Bradstreet rating and financial statements," said Fitz Gibbons.

He said a man who gave his name as Colby phoned back several weeks later to explain the company directors were Moslems and wanted details of their operation be held in confidence.

"My warning lights came on. I sent letters out to all our chambers advising them to tell people to 'check it out before you do it.'"

Life after Scientology

CALGARY (CP) — Brendon Moore began piecing his life back together again Tuesday after beating the Church of Scientology in a court case that cost him his wife, several jobs, a $5,000 church donation and four years of legal costs.

A defamation suit against Moore and six other persons was thrown out of Court of Queen's Bench in Edmonton Monday when the Church of Scientology failed to post a $45,000 bond to cover future court costs.

Ken Starosik, lawyer for the seven, said they will be back in court this fall trying to recover legal costs from the church.

The church sued its former members in September, 1976, for alleged defamation in letters to several organizations and to elected officials.

Moore, an electrician, suffered through four years of ensuing legal battles and personal difficulties.

"My family is literally ripped apart," he said quietly in an interview.

His brother and sister are still involved with the church.

"I can't have anything to do with them. I'd be in danger."

Aldergrove man charged in wife's death

VANCOUVER (CP) — Douglas Reeves of Aldergrove was charged Tuesday with first-degree murder in the shooting of his 47-year-old estranged wife.

Mary Louise Reeves of North Vancouver was found in the trunk of a car on a bush trail in Aldergrove, southeast of Vancouver.

'Ball of fire' youth douses himself

HULL, Que. (CP) — A terror-stricken youth was turned into a "ball of fire" Monday night but escaped virtually unscathed by jumping into a swimming pool behind his family's home.

"I'm burning! Help me!" Michel Nobert, 17, screamed after flames from a basement fire he was investigating jumped to his shirt, pants and shoes.

"All I saw was a ball of fire run by and jump into the pool outside," said the youth's father, Jean-Paul. "His screams were enough to scare you to death."

Police said Nobert's quick-thinking saved his life. He escaped with only minor burns.

Fire officials said a short-circuit in a fuse box sparked the blaze. Damage was estimated at $35,000.

$100,000 in heist

MONTREAL (CP) — Two men, one armed with a pistol, netted an estimated $100,000 in jewelry from a Birk's store in a suburban shopping centre Tuesday, police said.

Constable Real Cantin said one man held a gun on employees, while the other scooped valuables from display counters.

No one was hurt during the robbery and no arrests have been made.

Bear's victim died instantly

ZAMA, Alta. (CP) — Carol Anne Marshall, the 24-year-old Edmonton woman attacked by a black bear last week, died almost instantly, says the man who tried to save her.

Marty Ellis, 21, of Grande Prairie, recalled the nightmare of last Thursday's attack in an interview.

The two were walking near a creek, not far from the drilling camp where both were employed, when the bear suddenly attacked. The camp is outside this remote community, about 700 kilometres northwest of Edmonton.

'He came straight for us," said Ellis, who then half-carried the terrified woman to a tree.

"We were both about three or four feet up the tree and he got at her first," said Ellis, a heavy-equipment operator.

One mighty swipe of the animal's paw tore the woman, a camp attendant, from Ellis's grasp. Then the bear seized her by the neck, shook her violently several times and dragged her into a bush. Ellis said he never saw what the bear did to the woman's body after that.

Faye Ladyo, Miss Marshall's sister, has discounted earlier reports that the bear had partially eaten the woman.

At the time of the attack, the body of another victim, Lee Randall Morris, 44, lay hidden in the underbush about 100 metres away. The Calgary geologist was slain by the same black bear.

The bear was later killed after being spotted by a helicopter pilot.

Ellis said the beast made six lunges up the tree that he was using as refuge. Each time he beat it back with kicks to its face.

"He had to hang on (with both forelegs). That's what saved me."

Ellis' nightmare ended when Reagan Whiting, 9, saw what was happening and ran for help.

The boy returned with his father, Bud, who fired three shots, hitting the animal once. It bellowed, tumbled over and then got up and lumbered into the bush.

United church ponders gays

HALIFAX (CP) — The United Church of Canada has no formal policy on homosexuality but it will need one within two years as homosexual groups become more vocal and aggressive, say some authors of a controversial church report on human sexuality.

Sooner or later, a homosexual will be refused ordination and will publicly protest the decision, Donald Brundage, chairman of a group which prepared the report, said Tuesday. The church should have a formal policy to deal with such a situation, he added.

The says there is no reason why homosexuals shouldn't be ordained or appointed to church commissions.

The study document, which would not become church policy unless approved by the church council, also suggests that extramarital sex is all right in some instances and that masturbation and sexual fantasies are normal.

Delegates at the church's 28th session here have been sharply divided on the report since it was first brought to the floor Monday.

A church committee took eight hours Tuesday to recommend that the the report be distributed throughout the church as a study document. The committee's decisions must go before the general council later this week for final approval.

The committee also recommended that the church's division of mission prepare a draft policy statement for presentation to the general council before or at its 30th session and asked the division to start a training program to help the church deal with the report, its implications and reaction to it.

Since the church's sessions are normally held once every two years and could be only once every three years, it could be up to six years before the church decides on the policy.

SINGER-SONGWRITER Ferron, one of Vancouver's brighter musical lights, performs tonight at 8 at McPherson Playhouse. Her musical roots are in country and the folk-rock balladeering of the 60s, but the songs she writes and sings have an individuality and strength purely her own.

Superstar closes in London

LONDON (AP) — Jesus Christ Superstar, the musical whose worldwide success surprised even its two young British creators, finally comes to a close in London's West End after a money-spinning run of eight years.

The show ends at the Palace Theatre Saturday after 3,357 performances, making it the longest-running musical ever on the London stage.

"In theory, I suppose we could have let it run for another five years," said the show's lyricist, Tim Rice.

"But after a while, you don't score many points for running indefinitely," he said in an interview. "Besides, last winter the show had a rough time by its own standards," with too many empty seats.

Because of a contract between the Palace Theatre and the Robert Stigwood Organization, the show's producers, Superstar could not play elsewhere in the British Isles as long as it remained at the Palace.

"We have been inundated with requests over the years," Rice said from his home outside the university town of Oxford. "We felt we just had to take the show into the provinces where it will gain a whole new audience."

An extensive British tour is planned for next March.

The show first opened on Broadway, then was launched in London on Aug. 9, 1972, when Rice was just 27 years old and the composer, Andrew Lloyd-Webber, three years younger. Since then it has grossed more than $237 million worldwide.

Only one other musical has run longer in London — The Black and White Minstrel Show, which opened in 1962 and ran for 10 years. But as Rice pointed out, that was a revue, not a dramatic musical.

Two million people have seen Superstar in London alone, and box office takings total more than $16.6 million. News of the closing has brought a surge in bookings.

Superstar has been translated into 11 languages and performed in 22 countries. Its success is all the more remarkable because of the trouble Rice and Lloyd-Webber had selling the original idea.

Impressarios were nervous about such a grandiose production with a religious subject, Rice explained.

In the end, the show's popularity and acceptance by Roman Catholics and other denominations went well beyond Rice's expectations.

Rice would not disclose how much he has earned in royalties, other than saying the income "could not keep me going indefinitely."

Evita, based on the life of former Argentine ruler Eva Peron, is grossing even more money for Rice and Lloyd-Webber.

Currently in its third year, Evita is doing better than Superstar at the same point in their histories, said Rice, although it hasn't sold as many LP records.

"I suppose it might be that Superstar appealed more at the time to the young record-buying public," he said.

With an earlier hit also under their belts, Joseph and The Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat, the Rice-Lloyd Webber team is about to start work on a fourth musical.

Declining to reveal its subject, Rice said it would avoid both politics and religion.

Child mad at parents, leaves tarantula in bed

WINONA, Minn. (UPI) — Juvenile authorities today held a 14-year-old girl who watched the movie Tarantulas: The Deadly Cargo then allegedly went to a local pet store, bought one of the hairy spiders and put it in her parents' bed.

Police said the parents found the creature as they were preparing to go to sleep.

The teen-ager had threatened them earlier, the parents told police.

Authorities ordered the spider killed and kept for evidence. The tarantula is popularly believed to be very dangerous, but its poison has little effect on humans.

Because the girl is a juvenile, police refused to release her name or reveal the charges on which she was arrested.

The film, broadcast on CBS Saturday, concerned a horde of tarantula that got loose in the crash of a cargo plane and invaded a town in the southwest.

Those TV plots are recycled

NEW YORK (AP) — Madelyn Davis remembers that day she and Bob Carroll appeared on television in Los Angeles four separate times — twice in the morning with Lucille Ball, once in the afternoon with The Mothers-in-Law and that evening with Alice.

"I was worried that we might have the same plot two or three times," she says. "That's the challenge. We hate to repeat ourselves.

"We have young people on the staff who say, 'Why don't we do this?' Bob and I look at each other and smile. We did that with Lucy 20 years ago."

In fact, it's not a difficult trick to catch the work of Madelyn Davis and Bob Carroll three or four times a day.

They wrote every episode of I Love Lucy broadcast between the show's premiere Oct. 15, 1951, and the fall of 1957, when the last original program in the original series was shown.

They accompanied Miss Ball to The Lucy Show in 1962 and were still writing for the comedienne when the show left the air in September, 1974. The couple wrote for Kay Ballard and The Mothers-in-Law (1967-69) and have been writers and producers for CBS's Alice since the show premiered in August, 1976.

With that kind of resume, a little repetition now and then might be excusable, but don't look for the same joke twice. However, you may see certain themes repeated.

"Greed, envy . . ." Miss Davis says.

"Jealousy," the bearded Carroll adds.

"Humor is basic," Miss Davis says. "We have a basic thing we've done several times called Don't Do Business with a Friend. You know, like selling your car to your brother-in-law. Something always goes wrong with the muffler.

"So we had the Ricardos and Fred and Ethel involved in a deal over a washing machine, and the appliance didn't work. And later, in Alice, Mel sold his car to the girls. All kinds of things went wrong.

Carroll and Miss Davis joined Lucille Ball in the late 1940s as writers for her radio show, My Favorite Husband. When CBS approached Miss Ball about a TV series, she said she wanted her real-life husband, Cuban bandleader Desi Arnaz, to co-star in the show.

"In those days we did 39 shows a year," Miss Davis recalls. "I still can't believe it. Now we have seven writers on Alice and do just over half as many shows as we did with Lucy."

"With Lucy," Carroll says, "we would meet with Jess Oppenheimer, the head writer, one day a week, and say, 'What do we do this time?' "

Miss Davis adds: "We used to start by saying, 'What does Lucy want?' Often, the answer was, 'To get into show business.' "

Miss Ball was adept at physical comedy, the writers remember, and they often took advantage of that talent. With Alice, Miss Davis says, "We don't do that much physical comedy, though we do some. It's more character comedy."

"Lucy made you think of good things," Carroll says. "She did them so well.

Carroll and Miss Davis are constantly on the lookout for ideas. "It's just as hard as it ever was to come up with something new, Carroll says. "Every week, we think we're not going to do it. We always do.

"Madelyn has kept what we call The Good Book, with notes we've kept over the years."

"We look there from time to time," Miss Davis says, "and we still get ideas from newspapers."

Scramble starts in France

By DON COOK
Los Angeles Times

PARIS — France's presidential election is still eight months away, but the scrambling for position is already under way amid signs that there may be as many as 12 candidates.

Valery Giscard d'Estaing, the incumbent and leader of the centrist Union for French Democracy, has not announced that he will be a candidate for re-election. He is not expected to make an announcement until the last moment, possibly in March.

The Gaullist opposition, now known as the Rally for the Republic, is already divided. Michel Debre, who served the late President Charles de Gaulle as prime minister, has announced that he will be a candidate, to the unconcealed irritation of Jacques Chirac, the party leader.

The Communist Party is expected to nominate its leader, Georges Marchais. In the last election, in 1974, the Communists united behind Socialist Francois Mitterrand, but that popular front barely survived the election.

It is not at all certain that Mitterrand will be the Socialist Party's candidate this time. He is 63 and his popularity is fading. The No. 2 man in the party, Michel Rocard, is running ahead of Mitterrand in the polls and is widely thought to be the best man to face Giscard d'Estaing. If Mitterrand does not step aside, there could be a split in the Socialist ranks.

What the other parties will do — there are seven other parties of significance and about as many regarded as minor — is a matter of speculation.

The campaign will open formally when the government's Journal Officiel publishes the list of presidential candidates who have put themselves forward under prescribed rules and have been approved by the Constitutional Council. Then official campaign posters will go up at all the polling stations throughout the country and television time will be allocated to the candidate.

There are no nominating conventions as such in France, although the major parties always try to use the party machinery to back a single party candidate.

A candidate needs only to collect 500 nominating signatures from mayors, members of Parliament or members of the departmental assemblies, from at least 30 different departments (counties) and with no more than 30 from any one department. This formula, decided by the cabinet last month when it fixed the election date, tightens up the requirements since the last election, when only 100 signatures were required.

There was no explanation why the government chose to announce the election so far in advance — the first round is scheduled for April 26, with the runoff, if necessary, two weeks later on May 10.

Under the constitution, elections must take place between 20 and 35 days before the expiration of the president's seven-year term of office, with a two-week interval between the first round and the runoff.

Giscard d'Estaing's term will expire May 27, 1981, but the election dates were complicated by the fact that Easter comes on April 19 next year, and Sunday, May 3, will be part of a long May Day weekend. Hence the balloting will be on the Sunday after Easter, and on the Sunday after the holiday weekend.

Although Giscard d'Estaing may not announce his intention until March, or even later, there is little doubt that he will seek reelection.

There is no real heavyweight on either the left or the right, but with a dozen candidates in the race and French voters showing disenchantment with right-of-centre conservative government, Giscard d'Estaing's real hazard will be not his opponents but fragmentation of the vote.

His victory in 1974 was close — 50.8 per cent of the runoff vote, against 49.2 per cent for Mitterrand. There were 23 million registered voters in France in 1974, and a switch of only 230,000 votes would have changed the outcome.

At this stage, political analysts are generally agreed that even though there are no strong opposition candidates, the French president is not likely to improve his share of the vote by more than a couple of percentage points.

Ozone cancer fighter?

WASHINGTON (AP) — Scientists have discovered that a common air pollutant called ozone inhibits the growth of cancer cells, a finding that they say may point to future applications in cancer therapy.

Researchers at Washington University Medical School in St. Louis said Monday that continuous exposure to ozone of a variety of cancer cells slowed their growth much more than the gas affected normal cells.

Dr. Frederick Sweet, a biochemist who led the research effort, said it is too early to tell whether the surprise finding eventually will have human therapeutic applications.

But as a first step in finding out, the researchers have begun exposing mice with lung cancer to air rich in ozone. Lung cancer is the easiest to expose to ozone because the gas is breathed in with normal air, he said.

If ozone proves to be of any value against cancer, it may be used in combination with more conventional therapies, such as radiation and drugs, the researcher said.

But more testing is necessary before any use of the potentially toxic gas can be recommended, he stressed.

Sweet said in a telephone interview that cancer experts at the university find the discovery interesting, but said that ozone's effectiveness as a therapy may depend upon how well it penetrates layers of cells.

"Its effects may not go too deeply, and that could limit its usefulness," Sweet said. "But that's what we'll have to find out."

Ozone is a form of oxygen made by electrical sparks or ultraviolet light reacting with air or gases containing oxygen. At ground level, air normally contains much less than one part per million of ozone.

Strong concentrations of ozone irritate the eyes and nose, and can cause breathing difficulties and chest discomfort, particularly for those with asthma and respiratory problems.

In a report published in Science magazine, Sweet and Drs. Ming-Shian Kao and Song-Chiau Lee report how they built a special chamber for exposing cell cultures to air pollutants.

"Originally, we were just trying to organize a system to test the health effects of pollutants," Sweet said. "We started with ozone because it is easy to generate and tested normal cells. Then we decided to see what would happen to cancer cells and discovered this dramatic growth retardation."

Missing Chicago heiress $21 million puzzle

CHICAGO (AP) — Expensive racehorses that never earned their keep and some poorly forged cheques are among the clues perplexing investigators assigned to solve the $21-million puzzle of why heiress Helen Vorhees Brach vanished.

Mrs. Brach's lawyer, John Menk, says the three-year-old trail is "as cold as yesterday's pancakes," but her brother believes there's still hope of finding out what happened and wants a judge to hire a private investigator to look for her.

Unless the mystery is solved, her estate, estimated at $21 million, will remain in limbo for four more years. Under state law, missing people are not declared legally dead until seven years after their disappearances and their estates cannot be distributed until then.

Mrs. Brach, who is 62 if she is still alive, was a Miami Beach club hostess when she married Frank Brach of the Brach Candy Co. He died in 1970 at the age of 80, and she lived quietly afterward on a seven-acre estate in Glenview, north of Chicago.

On Feb. 17, 1977, Mrs. Brach left the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn., where she had a routine check-up and bought a few trifles at a specialty shop. A clerk at the store is the last person who remembers seeing her, other than her long-time houseman, John Matlick.

Matlick said she caught a flight back to Chicago that day and he picked her up at the airport. He said she stayed at home for the next four days and then he drove her to the airport for a trip to Florida. He said that was the last time he saw her.

Police said Mrs. Brach had no reservation on a Florida-bound plane that day and never boarded one.

Matlick cashed seven cheques worth $15,000 written on Mrs. Brach's account on Feb. 17 and 18. He said they were compensation for household expenses. Police said the cheques were forged and the signature didn't even resemble Mrs. Brach's. No charges were filed.

Police investigators said they also examined ties between Mrs. Brach and two horsemen, Richard Bailey and his brother, Paul Bailey. Mrs. Brach dated Richard, and Paul sold her $300,000 worth of racehorses that lost about $120,000 in their first year of running.

Investigators found that a strange investment for Mrs. Brach, who, they said, lived conservatively except for a penchant for riding in a lavender Rolls-Royce or a pink Cadillac.

Mrs. Brach's brother, Charles Vorhees, of Hopedale, Ohio, petitioned Circuit Court last week to renew efforts to find his sister. He wants the court to take money from the estate to hire a private investigator and and to offer a $250,000 reward for information.

Police remain perplexed. To one detective assigned to the case, it is as if Mrs. Brach "disappeared off the face of the earth."

Don't choke your home

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — Winterize your home! Zip it up so tight that next to none of the wonderful warmth produced by that precious petroleum can escape. That's been the word since the price of oil skyrocketed.

Now, New York is trying to find out if some homeowners have plugged up their houses so well that the air inside becomes a health hazard.

Getting the answer will cost more than $300,000.

The problem is that although tight houses may be great for heating bills, they can also grate on the health of people inside.

Poisonous cigarette smoke, dust from ceilings and insulation, germs and even bad odors from last week's fried trout can be just as easily locked into a home as can hot air.

"We suspect that if the EPA (the federal Environmental Protection Agency) was monitoring some of the homes like it does the air outside it'd be going after them (for violations) too," said Arthur Melville of the Rochester Gas and Electric Co., which is involved in the program.

RGE and the state's energy research and development aurhority thought up the study, which is being conducted on 60 Rochester area homes by members of a University of California testing institute. The federal department of energy is picking up most of the $313,000 price-tag.

The plan is to test the "air infiltration" capabilities of the homes, which have all been built within the last 10 years. Using fans, researchers will record the pressure in the homes. Then tracer gases will be injected into the homes to discover leakage.

So far, Melville said, about 25 of the homes have undergone the first phase of the study, which he said is the largest of its kind ever conducted.

In the older homes, Melville said researchers expect to find infiltration wasting energy by replacing the air supply in a home as many as two or three times an hour.

But in homes built since the latest round of petroleum panic in the U.S., Melville said researchers might find a total air exchange only once every five hours or longer.

Melville said the study would recommend that owners of the particularly "tight" houses instal a so-called "air-to-air heat exchanger" which allows fresh air entering a house to be warmed by the outgoing bad air.

But Melville says it's doubtful any homes, except those built recently with a sharp eye for energy savings, would be susceptible to excessive stuffiness. He said condensation on windows and lingering aromas are warning signs what a house might be too tight.

"I just don't know what we'll find," Melville said. "But we already have two or three different solutions to the problem. That is, if there is a problem."

Miami's good spot for nabbing 'mules'

By BOB MURPHY
Cox News Service

MIAMI — The young couple from Denver approached the harried customs inspector at Miami International Airport and plopped their suitcases on the counter.

They were self-assured and confident. They were well-dressed. Their luggage was by Gucci.

The only suspicious item in their luggage was a $1.98 white, glazed ashtray marked "Souvenir of Colombia."

What would a well-to-do couple want with a cheap ashtray from Colombia, the inspector wondered.

He asked senior customs inspector Dale O'Connor to have a look at the ashtray.

"I was flabbergasted," O'Connor said later. "That very morning the Drug Enforcement Administration showed me a photograph of the same kind of ashtray. It was compressed cocaine, molded and glazed to look like a cheap ashtray.

"It was worth about $20,000 on the street. They were mass-producing them in Bogota."

As O'Connor puts it, "Working narcotics at Miami International Airport is like playing hide-and-seek with the best brains in the smuggling business. But sooner or later we usually win. We'd better."

O'Connor is part of a three-tiered narcotics intercept team composed of customs, the drug agency and the Metri-Dade County Public Safety Department narcotics intercept unit.

Customs looks for contraband from overseas, the Metro police look for it on domestic flights and the federal agency provides intelligence and develops major cases.

Ponytail

The team shares responsibility for stopping the flow of narcotics into Miami International Airport — known as the busiest drug beat in the United States. Miami is believed to be the port of entry for as much as 95 per cent of the cocaine that gets into the country.

Fewer than 200 federal agents and Metro officers search for the suspected drug couriers, known in the trade as "mules."

The mules try to blend in anonymously with the masses who pour into Miami daily, and they often succeed. Last year, 3.5 million passengers arrived here from abroad, mostly Latin America. Thousands of cargo planes arrive with freight as well as passengers.

"If we see a drop in body carriers, then we know the big shipments are getting through," said George Ellin, the man in charge of the drug agency's airport unit.

"If we arrest more mules, then we know we've done a good job of slowing the major shipments," said Sgt. William Pearson, who heads the Metro airport interdiction team.

The tall, skinny man with a purse slung over his shoulder eyed the young man paying cash for a one-way ticket to Los Angeles. The youngster was barely out of his teens. His hair was in a ponytail, his jeans loose-fitting.

The man with the purse was an agent, a "narc." He looked at Pearson, who nodded slightly. The nod meant the young traveller fit the Drug Enforcement Administration's computerized profile of a domestic drug courier, a profile which is updated almost daily.

The suspect was searched. Strapped to his leg was a kilogram (2.2 pounds) of cocaine destined for Hollywood, Calif.

A deal was made with the young courier, a deal he couldn't refuse unless he wanted to be taken in then and there.

"He made the run to pay off some debts," Pearson said. "We let the coke go through, notified the Los Angeles police and got the guy to work for us so we could find the source of it. It eventually paid off, and L.A. got the coke."

O'Connor said, "We've gotten cocaine built into a suitcase that cost $500,000 in Colombia. It was a beautiful job. When we took it apart we found enough hiding places to secret several kilos of cocaine. Some guy was producing them for a drug-smuggling ring."

Argentine riding saddles stuffed with cocaine were seized after shipment from Bolivia. They've found coke in shipments of shoes with false heels, in scuba tanks and in fire extinguishers with false bottoms.

The narcotics units are backed-up by narcotics-sniffing dogs, a marine patrol and an air patrol. The airport units can call on the Coast Guard and other government agencies for help.

Saddles

The members of the three units have a gut feeling about narcotics couriers.

In case that's not enough — and it often isn't — they also have the backup of the drug agency's computer that spits out updated intelligence on shipments from foreign sources.

The system also provides "profiles" of drug couriers — their common traits, dress and modus operandi.

Of course, the smugglers are innovative, too. O'Connor recalled the case of a family with 10 children returning to this country from Jamaica.

The kids were acting like kids, but the mother and father were nervous. Each was carrying a tote bag. On a hunch, O'Connor ordered a thorough inspection of all their bags. The customs inspectors found marijuana stashed in the false bottom of each bag.

Narcotics are not all that customs agents find.

O'Connor had one of his gut feelings as he watched a little old lady going through customs after a flight from Cuba.

"There was something about the way she carried herself," O'Connor said.

"I ordered a search and found she had two live birds tucked under her armpits. I expected maybe some cocaine, but birds? Never."

Women tired of taking pill?

BERLIN (AP) — Gynecologists observed a certain weariness by East German women about taking birth-control pills, a survey says.

The survey, from the university clinic in Leipzig, East Germany, says many East German women are "sick and tired of continuously swallowing hormones" whereas men are not prepared to take over any responsibility regarding birth control.

U.K. tourists sail home as blockade extended

PARIS (AP) — The last of about 6,000 British voyagers marooned in the Normandy port of Cherbourg by a fishermen's blockade sailed home today, but the opening round of negotiations to settle the dispute appeared to have failed.

Talks among representatives of the government, fishermen and unions were expected to resume later in the day.

Meanwhile, the Brittany port of Roscoff, which had been the only one on the English Channel still functioning, now is also under blockade, cutting off the sole maritime export point for Brittany's vegetables.

The strike by fishermen protesting against the high price of boat fuel and the threat of unemployment in their recession-hit industry is costing the French economy millions of dollars a day.

The government has said it is willing to negotiate on every point except the fuel issue, arguing that to subsidize prices any further would violate the European Common Market's rules on fair competition.

The tourists trapped in Cherbourg were allowed to leave after the fishermen lifted their blockade for a day as a humanitarian gesture.

A number of smaller ports were freed of the blockade for brief periods to ease the plight of passengers who came here for their August holiday and suddenly found themselves unable to sail home.

Worms live in ocean black

LA JOLLA, Calif. (AP) — Strange marine creatures have been discovered living in dark, deep-sea waters heated by volcanic vents in the Gulf of California, says a joint U.S.-Mexican expedition.

It is the first time such life has been found in a semi-enclosed gulf basin, geologist Peter Lonsdale said Tuesday.

Lonsdale, who heads the scientific team, returned Monday from the expedition in the Guaymas Basin about 1,000 kilometres southeast of San Diego.

Two similar finds have been made in the open sea.

The discoveries of red, snake-like worms that live in long, white tubes in the unlit world of 1.5-kilometre-deep water raise a question about the necessity of sunlight to support life, Lonsdale said.

The worms were found near undersea geysers and 18-metre-high sulfide cones that warm the chilly waters.

Scientists aboard a research ship took pictures of large, writhing worms rising from their white tubes as well as other creatures similar to those found in 1976 in two sea-floor vents off Ecuador and Mexico, Lonsdale said.

All three geysers are located along "spreading centre" cracks in the earth's crust. These centres are where lava is pushing up to the ocean floor as giant plates of the earth's crust pull apart, Lonsdale said.

"There must be a spreading centre right in the middle of the Gulf of California where the Baja peninsula is moving away from the mainland of Mexico," said the Scripps Institution of Oceanography geologist.

The underwater geysers in the Guaymas Basin differs from spreading centres in the open ocean because the basin is covered with a thick blanket of sediment washed into the gulf from land, Lonsdale said.

"This modifies the way the lava rises. It comes up through the rock of the sea floor and hits the mud layer and sort of freezes."

Soviets repeat arms appeal

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union made a strong new call today for an all-European disarmament conference, saying a "broad and flexible" outline for the session could be decided upon at the Helsinki review meetings beginning next month in Madrid.

Western diplomats said the reference to a flexible approach to the disarmament conference appeared to reflect urgent Soviet interest in getting the meeting under way.

Plans to hold that meeting have long been delayed over differing ideas of the conference's purpose among the Soviet Union, France, Finland, Sweden and other countries.

"The task now consists of doing away with current disagreements in the positions of countries on the goals and contents of the conference's work — its mandate," said the Soviet appeal, published in an authoritative article in the Communist party daily Pravda.

The Soviet-led Warsaw Pact countries have already proposed Warsaw as the site for the conference, and have offered the West a series of new military "confidence-building" measures.

In Washington, meanwhile, U.S. Defence Secretary Harold Brown said today the Russians either have, or are on the verge of attaining, the capability to destroy U.S. land-based missiles in their underground launch bases.

Brown said this in warning that Soviet military advances in weapons power, numbers and technology could in the future "threaten the survivability of each component of our strategic forces," including 1,000 Minuteman intercontinental ballistic missiles, the bomber forces and missile-firing submarines.

Brown's statement appeared to make the Soviet threat to the U.S. Minuteman ICBM force more immediate than his forecast to Congress less than seven months ago.

Port Vila brutality protested

PORT VILA, Vanuatu (Reuter) — Prisoners from the rebel island of Espiritu Santo were kicked and beaten through the streets of Port Vila today by jeering crowds and then by police.

Assaulted by crowds at the airport and later outside the old British jail, the 26 rebels then had to run a gauntlet of policemen wielding rifle butts and batons.

Some were French citizens, and French Ambassador Yves Rodrigues immediately filed a formal protest to the government of Vanuatu, an island chain in the South Pacific ruled by Britain and France until last month as the New Hebrides.

The government promised an urgent investigation.

The rebels were the second batch of prisoners flown from Espiritu Santo by Papua-New Guinean troops supressing a 12-week-old secessionist revolt on the island at Vanuatu's request.

On Espiritu Santo, the Papua-New Guinean force announced the arrest today of 30 more rebels.

Otto Frank dies at 91

BASEL, Switzerland (UPI) — Otto Frank, 91, father of Anne Frank the Jewish girl who wrote the diary of how her family eluded the Nazis by hiding in an Amsterdam attic, died Tuesday night.

Frank, his wife and children hid for two years before collaborators informed Nazi occupiers about them. Anne Frank's diary of that time has been translated into 50 languages.

CINDY NICHOLAS, a Toronto law student, abandoned her attempted three-way swim of the English Channel in France early today after one crossing because of rough seas. Nicolas, who celebrated her 23rd birthday today, went into the sea at Dover, Eng., Tuesday afternoon despite uncertain weather conditions forecast for the next two days. Rough weather also forced paraplegic swimmer John Robertson, 30, of San Diego, Calif., to abandon his second attempt to swim the channel, and U.K. journalist Kevin Murphy, 31, who set off Monday night aiming to complete a three-way swim, also gave up early today. Other channel hopefuls to quit Tuesday were Jon Erikson, 26, a Chicago teacher, and Alison Roberts, 18, a teacher from Port Talbot, Wales.

Liner props turn again

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — The world's largest cruise ship, stranded in the Caribbean for a day with 2,440 people aboard without running water or air conditioning, was building steam today and preparing to get under way on a revised course to the Bahamas, officials said.

Crew members traced the power failure aboard the SS Norway to the ship's electrical switching system and told the U.S. Coast Guard they believe the problem has been repaired.

A spokesman for the shipping line said the engines are running and the liner is expected to be under way shortly.

The coast guard cutter Chase was dispatched from the U.S. naval base at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, to escort the Norway if further problems developed, a guard official said.

"The situation is uncomfortable, but not dangerous," said Ric Widmer, a Miami-based vice-president of marketing for Norweigan Caribbean Lines, the company that owns the ship. "The passengers are in good spirits."

"We have been serving them cold meals, of course . . .and soft drinks and beer," said cruise line official Maggie Dukes.

Widmer said the cruise line decided to cancel the first scheduled stop on the seven-day cruise, St. Thomas in the Virgin Islands. The Norway, which left Miami on Sunday, is expected to arrive in Little San Salvador in the Bahamas on Thursday instead of Saturday, while a Nassau stop has been added for Friday. The ship will return to Miami on Sunday, as scheduled, he said.

Widmer said company officials will discuss "an adjustment for the passengers," who paid for tickets ranging from $630 to $1,415 per person.

The Norway, which at 315 metres is larger than the Queen Elizabeth II, was stranded about 250 kilometres north of Caicos Island in the southern Bahamas at early Tuesday afternoon.

It was carrying about 2,440 people, including 862 crew members, officials said.

Iranians urged to stop landing in on ayatollah

TEHRAN (Reuter) — Iranian state radio appealed to the public Tuesday night to refrain from making unscheduled calls on revolutionary leader Ayatollah Khomeini.

In a commentary, the radio said the 80-year-old ayatollah's doctors have prohibited such meetings to safeguard his health.

It said that when people arrive at his northern Tehran home shouting revolutionary slogans, "you know that this man cannot stay still for a moment, and with his old age and his weakness and in spite of the orders of his physicians, puts his health in danger and comes to see you."

The radio added: "For the development of Islam, the export of our revolution to the world, strengthening the position of this international movement and supporting the Islamic republic, we must accept not visiting the imam."

Earlier this year, Khomeini spent five weeks in hospital suffering from a heart complaint. After his release he took up residence in Tehran instead of returning to his former home in the holy city of Qom.

DUTCH POLICE on motorcycle, horseback and foot — and firing tear-gas cannisters — charged some 5,000 people outside an Amsterdam apartment block today, and the spectators answered with a hail of cobblestones and paving tiles. Police had moved into the area to enforce a court order evicting what they believed were 260 squatters occupying 47 of the 52 luxury apartments in the building. But just as police were about to assault the building, a lone squatter identified as Erik appeared at one window, waving a bunch of flowers at cheering supporters behind police lines. "All the squatters have left," Erik told police. "I cannot leave because we have welded the doors closed."

Israelis bomb Lebanon for second day in row

TEL AVIV (AP) — Israeli planes bombed Palestinian targets in southern Lebanon today for the second consecutive day after guerrillas pounded Israel's northern Galilee panhandle with a barrage of rockets, the military command announced.

A brief communique said all Israeli planes returned safely after bombing "forward and organizational bases used for strikes" against Israel. It did not identify the targets.

Officials said Palestinian crews fired Soviet-made Katyusha rockets at settlements in Galilee, but no one was injured.

Military sources in Tel Aviv said Israeli-backed Christian militias in southern Lebanon shelled guerrilla strongholds in the areas of Arnoun and Beaufort Castle, targets of a major raid by Israeli troops and planes late Monday and early Tuesday.

A spokesman for Israel's military command denied a report from the Palestinian news agency WAFA that Israeli border gunners shelled guerrilla strongholds in three southern Lebanese towns.

WAFA said Israeli border gunners and right-wing Christian militia this morning launched a 30-minute artillery barrage on the port city of Tyre, the town of Nabatiyeh and the neighboring village of Aishieh, all southern Lebanese towns controlled by Palestinian guerrillas. WAFA, which is controlled by the Palestine Liberation Organization, said one Palestinian woman was wounded in the attack.

After Monday night's major Israeli raid against Palestinian strongholds in southern Lebanon, Lt.-Gen. Raphael Eytan, Israeli chief of staff, said his forces would continue to carry the fight to their foes north of the Israeli-Lebanese border.

"When we talk about the initiative, we're talking abut hitting them at the appropriate time," he said. "I don't mean only after they kill an Israeli child or attack an Israeli bus and all the world will say we're right."

Meanwhile, Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin on Tuesday urged Egyptian President Anwar Sadat to resume negotiations on Palestinian autonomy forthwith, rejecting Sadat's suggestion that the talks restart after November U.S. presidential elections.

Replying to Sadat in their protracted exchange of letters, Begin criticized personal attacks in the Egyptian news media which had drawn parallels between Begin and Nazi German dictator Adolf Hitler.

In his letter, released by the government press office, Begin said if Egypt's attitude to autonomy negotiations remained negative they would remain suspended and that Egypt must bear responsibility for this.

As for Sadat's idea of holding a summit meeting after the U.S. elections, Begin said the idea should be quietly explored, provided Israel, the United States and Egypt agreed in principle to hold such a conference.

In Cairo, U.S. Ambassador Alfred Atherton met with a top Egyptian official Tuesday as Washington stepped up its campaign to have the stalled Middle East peace talks going again.

Search for party renewed

Times News Service

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — The U.S. National Park Service will renew a search for four missing climbers, including three Ontario men, reported missing on an expedition in the Mount McKinley area of Alaska.

The decision to renew the search came after another climber reported seeing a blue object, mostly obscured by snow, on July 22 and 23 on the west flanks of the 6,194-metre peak, the tallest in North America.

The four, David Carroll, 31, of Seagrave, Ont., Sean Lewis, 33, and George Manson, 25, both of Toronto, and Alan Chase, 23, of South Waterford, Me., are missing and were presumed dead.

Joan Gidlund, a U.S. national park service spokesman, said Tuesday the area has been searched by air three times but that a helicopter would take a closer look as soon as weather permits.

It was the first report of any kind to indicate the possible whereabouts of the climbers who departed July 2 and were due back July 31, Gidlund said.

Meanwhile, David Carroll's father Stanley says the U.S. park service should have conducted ground searches instead of just aerial searches, and should have started a search when the climbers lost radio contact.

The park service started their search Aug. 3.

The Times to strike again

LONDON (Reuter) — Journalists at The Times, Britain's oldest daily newspaper, decided today to go on strike Friday for a 21-per-cent pay raise.

The decision, subject to backing from the National Union of Journalists, followed insistence by management — the Toronto-based Thomson Organisation — that its original 18-per-cent offer must stand because of the paper's current losses.

The journalists are demanding that management abide by an independent arbitration board's recommendation of a 21-per-cent increase.

The Times and its sister publications reappeared only last November after an 11-month closure.

Management shut down the papers because of a complex dispute with unions over the introduction of new printing method.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	2 ♡	3 ♣	Pass
4 ♣	4 ◇	4 ♠

Opening lead — king of hearts.

A declarer is often guided to the right line of play by the bidding of one or both of his opponents. For a typical case, consider the present deal where South got to four spades on the sequence shown.

West cashed the K-A of hearts and next played the queen of diamonds. South realized from the bidding that West probably had 6-5 or 6-6 distribution in the red suits. Accordingly, he took the diamond lead in dummy and returned the jack of trumps, covered by the king and ace. Then, consistent with his view that East probably had started with four trumps, South played a low club to dummy's ace and led another trump, successfully finessing the eight.

When West showed out on the second spade lead, it appeared that declarer would later lose a diamond trick as well as a trump trick and go down one, since he had no further entry to dummy to take still another trump finesse.

But South found a neat solution to his difficulty. He cashed the K-Q of clubs and next led the king and another diamond, thus putting West on lead and producing this position:

North

West
♡ J
◇ J 10

East
♠ 10 7
♣ J

South
♠ Q 9 2

It did not matter whether West now led a heart or a diamond. In either case, declarer would trump in dummy with the four and so render East helpless. If East overruffed the four, South would easily score the last three tricks by overruffing and drawing trumps. And if East elected, instead, to discard the club jack in the diagramed position, South would underruff dummy's four with the deuce and thus also score the last two tricks to make the contract.

FUN WITH FIGURES

By J. A. H. HUNTER

"Then it's settled. We each contribute that amount for Bill's gift," Harry declared. "But first let's settle any debts to each other."

Tom smiled. "Okay, I'll have to pay $31 in all," he replied. "I owe you $15, but Jack's in debt to both of us."

Jack took out his wallet. "Here's $44," he said. "That clears me."

Harry checked the amount. "Fine, and what I get exactly pays my share for the gift."

How much would each contribute?

Thanks for idea to F. C. Asbury, Toronto, Ontario.

The Lord is my Shepherd
I shall not want
He maketh me to lie down in green pastures
He restoreth my soul
He leadeth me in the path of righteousness for his name's sake
Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death
I will fear no evil
For thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff they comfort me
Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies
Thou anointest my head with oil
My cup runneth over
Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life and I will dwell in the House of the Lord forever.

Architect's model shows the proposed Inn by the Park at Douglas and Superior.

Hotel plans unveiled for Douglas-Superior

Plans to replace the unsightly and unfinished Beaconville Apartments at Douglas and Superior with an eight-storey hotel were unveiled Tuesday.

A model of the project was shown at the public meeting of Victoria city council's Advisory Planning Commission.

The Inn by the Park would have 64 units, but no ancillary hotel services, such as a restaurant or cocktail lounge.

The proposal calls for a few one-bedroom suites, but most of the units would be bachelor apartments to be rented to tourists on a short-term basis.

"It will be a little better accommodation than a normal hotel," said Victoria architect Tom Stark who designed the building.

The plans require a change in the zoning. The property is too small for a hotel under the existing zoning.

The planning commission will consider the plans at a closed session Thursday and make a recommendation to council for next week's meeting.

Chiropractic ceiling raised

The provincial government has increased the benefit ceiling for persons over 65 requiring chiropractic and physiotherapy services to $125 a year from $100.

Health Minister Rafe Mair said the move will cost about $1.8 million a year.

Choosing the grass that's right for you garden notes

Continuing our discussion on the creation of a new lawn, once you have cleaned up the lawn site, removing rocks and any woody bits from the soil, the raking is performed, in the process ensuring there is a slight slope away from the house for good drainage. Then the final smooth contour is achieved by alternate raking and rolling.

When you are satisfied the lawn area is as perfectly prepared as you can make it — and this is the stage in which you should be prepared to spend all the time it takes for an efficient job — you are ready to apply the lawn seed and fertilizer.

Now a word or two about choosing your lawn seed. For the average homeowner, this matter of going about choosing the best seed for a lawn is quite a challenge. In fact, it's quite a complicated matter. There are hundreds of grasses that can be planted for home lawns. There are about 200 kinds of bluegrass alone, for example.

I suppose the best word of general advice I could give would be to go to the best garden supply store in your area, one where you have found the products to be good and the people knowledgeable and helpful. Then, buy the best lawn mixture they offer and recommend for your area.

Now the best is almost always the most expensive, simply because the finer grass seeds produce the smaller seeds, causing them to cost more per pound. But then the smaller the grass seed the greater area it will cover per pound. For example, a pound of Kentucky Blue grass will likely cover three to four times the area that most fescues will.

Most homeowners will buy their grass seed already packaged, though in some places it is still possible to weigh out your own mixtures from bins. It's rather important to plant a mixture of two or more varieties of grass seed for obvious reasons. Planting a lawn of all one variety involves the risk of complete wipeout by disease or insects if that variety is particularly susceptible.

For most parts of Canada and the northern U.S. the most commom varieties found in mixtures are bluegrass, fescue and ryegrass. In the past, I have had good results by planting an equal by weight mixture of Kentucky Bluegrass and creeping red fescue. The fescue germinates rapidly and establishes quickly, providing protection for the slower growing and more desirable bluegrass.

Both types spread by underground roots, or rhizomes, the bluegrass being the more vigorous spreader. So with luck you end up eventually with mostly bluegrass. For lawns which will receive heavy use, improved perennial ryegrasses are often blended with bluegrasses to provide a very durable lawn.

Nowadays, if you can get them, there are better, improved strains of both bluegrass and creeping fescues with which to make up your mixture.

For my own choice in the future, if and when I come to seeding another new lawn for my own home, I think that I would look for a blend of improved bluegrasses. True, I would have to wait a little longer for that first, delectable glimpse of green fuzz on the surface of my carefully prepared lawn site but the fine color, lush density and pleasing texture of the established lawn would be well worth the wait, I'm sure.

Last month, I walked on a demonstration plot of such a mixture during a tour of the Scotts operation at Marysville, Ohio — they're a major lawn products firm. This mixture, Picture, was like sinking deep into a lush, cool green carpet.

On your grass seed package, the label notation "Canada No. 1" signifies that the grass seed mixtures has met certain government standards. The seed has to give 75 to 80 per cent germination and it cannot contain more than a specified allowable percentage of weed seeds.

Accurate and even distribution of seed is essential for a lawn of uniform density. For this you need a good spreader, either purchased, borrowed or rented. A good spreader should come with directions giving the proper setting to be used for various purposes, including sowing of grass seed, but if you rent one be sure to ask the dealer for the proper setting.

Be sure to mix the seed up well before putting it into the spreader because there may have been some separation of the different varieties of seed in the package. Fill the spreader when it is standing on a piece of plastic or newspaper to avoid waste in case of some leakage. More tomorrow.

Scots opt for manual on suicide

EDINBURGH (AP) — The Scottish branch of Britain's euthanasia society, Exit, will publish the society's controversial booklet on how to commit suicide, Scottish officials have announced.

The move follows a decision last week by the London-based headquarters of Exit not to publish the 30-page booklet on the grounds that its officials could be jailed under laws in England and Wales that make aiding and abetting suicide — a criminal offense punishable by up to 14 years in jail.

In a statement, Exit's Scottish organizer, retired surgeon George Mair, said the society's Scottish committee was satisfied it could publish the booklet legally in Scotland, where aiding and abetting suicide is not an offence.

Mair predicted the booklet would provoke a "ferocious anti-response from people who do not understand what is involved.

"We will not be promoting murder," Mair declared. "The methods which are outlined could not possibly be carried out without the co-operation of the person involved."

Mair gave no date for publication of the booklet, which sets out four bloodless methods of suicide, including specific instructions on fatal overdoses of non-prescription drugs.

But it was understood the Scottish branch of Exit — whose full title is Exit, the Society for the Right to Die with Dignity — intends publishing the booklet next month.

Mair said the booklet would be available to all Exit members of three-months' standing in Scotland, but it would not be mailed across the border.

Exit officials in London were reluctant to comment, but confirmed the Scottish branch would use the same booklet they decided not to publish.

Last month police raided the London headquarters of Exit and removed files and some membership lists during a major investigation by London police into a dozen recent suicides or attempted suicides by people incurably ill, disabled or in pain.

Exit's executive committee in London last week described its decision against publication as a "tragedy" that meant continued suffering for thousands of incurably ill people who long for death.

Exit's membership has soared from 2,000 to more than 9,000 since it announced last fall in London it intended publishing the booklet.

Movie blamed in boy's death

PHOENIX, Ariz. (UPI) — A 13-year-old boy is being held for the Russian-roulette slaying of a neighborhood youngster police say took place in a re-enactment of scenes from the Vietnam-movie The Deer Hunter.

Juvenile officials this week ordered Gary Bahe held for the shooting death of John Triste, 8, killed while the two youngsters mimicked the Russian-roulette scene from the film. The movie was aired on television days before the incident.

Authorities will decide at a hearing Oct. 10 whether the teen-ager is guilty of manslaughter or negligent homicide, which could keep him in custody for up to five years.

Bill Culbertson, attorney for the youth, argued unsuccessfully that incarceration would delay his return to school, placing him behind classmates.

He maintained the slaying of Triste was not premeditated and said Bahe "made a fairly meticulous" inspection of the gun to be certain it was not loaded.

Mortgage rates rising again

By STEVE KERSTETTER

OTTAWA (CP) — Mortgage rates have begun to climb again, much to the dismay of home-buyers, housing contractors and some economic forecasters.

After coming down from their all-time highs in April, mortgages appear to have bottomed out and the going rate for a five-year, closed conventional mortgage has climbed back to as much as 14 per cent from 13 per cent or less.

In the U.S., interest rates on business loans and home mortgages are climbing again, and analysts say further increases are likely in the next several weeks.

The upward spiral was underscored Tuesday when Chase Manhattan Bank raised its prime rate a quarter of a per cent to 11.25 per cent and two major California mortgage lenders raised their rates to 13.5 per cent.

Wall Street analysts predicted other banks would soon join Chase and raise their rates from the prevailing 11-per-cent level.

In Canada it's anyone's guess what will happen to rates between now and the end of the year.

"If you talk to five economists, you get five different answers," says William W. Potter, executive vice-president of the Trust Companies Association of Canada.

While the experts may not agree on their forecasts, they agree on the reason for mortgage rates rebounding this summer: medium- and long-term money is simply more expensive to get.

Institutions such as trust companies and subsidiaries of chartered banks try to match the money they loan out in mortgages with the money they receive from investors buying five-year term deposits.

What's happened in the last two months is that it's been difficult for the institutions to attract these investors without paying them premium rates for their money.

Peter Carter, Royal Bank of Canada assistant general-manager of retail lending and mortgage services, says institutional investors and individuals alike have been reluctant to lock their money into longer-term investments because of a general feeling of uncertainty about the economy.

Carter says the yield on the most recent issue of five-year government of Canada bonds has risen to nearly 12 per cent within the last month, and trust companies and bank affiliates must go even higher than that to attract funds to lend out for mortgages.

The rate for five-year guaranteed investment certificates is running about 12.25 per cent. With an additional 1½ percentage points for operating expenses and profit — the minimum spread the lending institutions like to maintain — the rate for a five-year mortgage would be 13.75 per cent.

The institutions are also being squeezed by long-term deposits obtained last spring when interest rates were high. Even though interest rates generally have dropped, they must continue to pay high returns on those five-year deposits.

Duncan Baillie, vice-president and treasurer of Canada Trustco Mortgage Co., says many investors made their moves when the rates were peaking.

"March and April and most of May were gangbuster months," he says.

All this is little comfort to the person renewing his mortgage this fall or builders facing their worst slump in years.

Higher mortgage rates by definition mean higher monthly payments for consumers. The cost of paying off a $50,000 mortgage amortized over 25 years is $577.97 a month at a rate of 13.75 per cent. Last August, the rate was 11.75 per cent and the monthly payments on the same mortgage would have been $507.23.

Baillie says the demand for mortgage money from Canada Trust is less than it was 12 months ago.

"That's not to say it's dead," he adds. "We're still doing business, but it's not brisk."

The experience of the last year shows fairly conclusively that high interest rates can have a dramatic impact on housing construction.

Housing starts have been running at an annual rate of about 145,000 units. That's roughly three-quarters of last year's rate, and 1979 was certainly no banner year for the industry.

Migrants squeeze housing supply

The Canadian Press

Record migration to British Columbia in the first half of 1980 has created a combination of increased demand for housing in B.C. and continued tight rental markets in Vancouver and Victoria.

The migration will result in increases of between 10 and 15 per cent in house prices and rents for new accommodation this year, says the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corp.

Leading indicators of migration to B.C. such as transfers of family allowance accounts from other parts of Canada and job creation in the province, are sharply higher, meaning demand for housing will continue to grow, the corporation's July-August housing survey shows.

All factors taken together "point to a very buoyant housing market in many areas of the province in the coming months," said Richard McAlary, corporation regional economist.

Net transfers of family allowance accounts into B.C. set a record for the first half of 1980 — 1,857 families as of June 1, up 146 per cent from 1979.

"It would appear that the first half of 1980 will surpass the record-setting pace (of net family allowance accounts transfers) set in 1966 and the very strong first-half performance in 1974," McAlary said.

Metropolitan Vancouver has the highest absorption rate for new housing in Canada although it has the largest production of single detached housing, he said.

"The average amount of time a built-on-speculation, single-detached dwelling remains on the CMHC survey for metropolitan Vancouver is two months.

"The Canadian average for major metropolitan areas is 4.4 months."

A number of other statistics were cited.

Housing starts in B.C.'s urban areas fell 18 per cent, to 2,062 in July from 2,514 in June. But CMHC estimates that housing starts in 1980 will reach 33,000, up from the June estimate of 30,000.

Housing production in metropolitan Vancouver was flat in July.

Statistics Canada surveys show job creation in the Vancouver area was nearly 60,000 new jobs in the past 12 months, "a very strong historical performance and leading cause of housing demand pressure," McAlary said.

The 35,000 household fomations estimated by the corporation for the past year, translates into a demand for 40,000 housing units in B.C. between mid-1979 and mid-1980. Since B.C. has about 30,000 housing starts in that period, there will be a pent-up demand for 10,000 units in the next 18 to 24 months.

Police carry away fan during riot at CNE when Alice Cooper failed to show

Angry rock fans go on 'flash riot'

TORONTO (CP) — One of Alice Cooper's most successful shows, Welcome to My Nightmare, turned into reality Tuesday night at the Canadian National Exhibition when the rock star failed to show up for a concert and fans went on the rampage.

"A flash riot," as one CNE official described it, broke out when the crowd of about 14,000 Cooper fans were told that their idol was ill and would not make an appearance.

Ambulance officials at the scene said there were about 10 injuries, the most serious being a broken ankle. One girl was treated after being hit on the head by a flying chair.

Even though it was announced that ticket money would be refunded and another band was available to play, part of the crowd stormed the stage while others threw chairs, bottles and other projectiles.

Police said about 30 people were charged, most booked for assaulting police. Other charges included mischief and causing a disturbance.

As one disgruntled fan put it: "Who wants to get money back? We want to see Cooper."

But they did not see him. Instead they saw a show that Howard Tate, head of CNE's public relations, said he had "never seen anything like in my 19 years with the Ex."

Toronto police announced today that the Canadian Rock Festival, a concert scheduled for tonight at the CNE grandstand, has been cancelled because of the riot.

A drum skin was broken and a few other wires were ripped out, but stage hands said no serious damage was done to the equipment. The outside of the stadium was more heavily damaged, as windows, turnstiles and pay phones took the brunt of the fans' displeasure. A van parked outside the stadium had its windshield and headlights smashed.

Neither Tate nor other officials at the CNE could estimate how much damage was done or how much money would be lost on the concert. The estimates will be compiled later today.

As police worked outside the stadium trying to disperse the crowd, crews were busy on the inside cleaning up the mess. Almost all of the portable chairs set up on the field were uprooted and the ground, usually centrefield for Toronto Blue Jays, was covered with bottles and parts of permanent stadium chairs, which were torn off.

Tate said CNE officials got the final word that Cooper would not appear at 10:10, and the announcement was made five minutes later.

Spokesmen for Cooper did not disclose the rock star's illness, but one stage hand said he was suffering from a high fever.

Tunnel out, bridge in

Science Minister Pat McGeer today rejected the concept of a tunnel under Georgia Strait to connect Vancouver Island with the Mainland and pinned his hopes on a floating bridge.

The minister based his decision on the last of four private consultants' reports on the fixed-link proposal.

Parsons-Brinckerhoff Inc., an international engineering consultant firm based in San Francisco, says a tunnel under the strait would be too expensive and a floating tunnel too unsafe.

Instead, it recommends a floating bridge that would span Georgeia Strait with only one passage for large vessels. This would be situated in a man-made island about two kilometres in diameter.

The shipping lane would consist of a canal through the centre of this island.

While ships moved north and south through the canal, vehicle traffic would move east-west via a short tunnel through the seabed beneath the canal.

McGeer said this would be much safer than the submersible bridge section proposed as a shipping lane in an earlier study. It also would be much more expensive.

The price tag on the Parsons-Brinckerhoff concept is $3 billion to $4 billion, compared to the $2 billion estimate for the floating bridge proposal submitted by Willis, Cunliffe, Tait.

McGeer gives greater weight to the Parsons-Brinckerhoff study because the firm is actively involved in designing and building the new Hood Canal floating bridge.

Air crash toll rises to 301

JEDDAH, Saudi Arabia (Reuter) — The death toll from a fire which destroyed a Saudi Arabian jetliner at Riyadh airport rose to 301 Wednesday night with the discovery of more bodies in the charred shell of the aircraft, airport officials said.

This made it the second-worst-ever aviation disaster involving a single aircraft.

All the passengers and crew of the Lockheed L-1011 Tristar burned to death behind the jammed doors of the airliner Tuesday night after it made an emergency landing at Riyadh on a flight to Jeddah which began in Karachi, Pakistan.

Officials said the passengers were mostly Saudis and Pakistanis, but included three Britons living in

10 of 12 subcompacts fail crash test; death warning

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — U.S. government crash tests show that major safety improvements are necessary in small cars to prevent sharp increases in the highway death toll as Americans buy more sub-compacts to reduce fuel costs.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration reported Tuesday that only two of 12 models of 1980 subcompact cars passed its tests.

"Consumers need to know that when they switch to a small car to double the fuel economy, they may be doubling their risk of death in a crash — and that there are steps that can be taken to reduce the risk," said Joan Claybrook, administrator of the safety agency.

She was especially critical of Japanese models, and particularly cited two Toyota cars, the Tercel and the Celica, which she said would have to be redesigned structurally in order to pass the frontal crash test.

Japanese automakers "have just not put their attention" into strengthening vehicle structure, she said.

The NHTSA tested one domestic and 11 foreign car models by crashing them at 55 km/h into a fixed barrier with two dummies in the front seat wearing safety belts. A car failed the test when one of the test dummies was judged to have suffered a serious or fatal injury.

Only the Chevrolet Chevette, equipped with a three-point automatic belt system that encloses the occupant as he enters the car, and the Fiat Strada, which has conventional belts, passed the test. None of the highly popular Japanese models passed the tests.

The cars that failed the latest round of tests were the Honda Civic, Toyota Corolla, Toyota Tercel, Datsun 310, Subaru GLF and Honda Prelude, all mini-compacts weighing up to 2,150 pounds. Also

Change on helmets in works

An amendment to the Motor Vehicle Act to make use of motorcycle helmets mandatory in B.C. was introduced in the legislature Tuesday by Transport Minister Alex Fraser.

It's expected the amendment will become law within a week.

The amendment — which the NDP has agreed to support — will fix a section of the act which a provincial court judge ruled last week does not give the superintendent of motor vehicles authority to make helmet use mandatory.

Under the amendment, the section rejected by the judge will be replaced by one which states motorcyclists wear a safety helmet, but does not mention the superintendent.

Oak Bay lots hit $85,000

Oak Bay Tuesday night auctioned 26 choice lots at $61,000 to $85,000 each to reap $1,865,500 for municipal coffers.

About 150 people took about two hours to buy up the serviced, single-family lots which are bounded by Foul Bay, Lansdowne and Henderson near Camosun College.

Ald. Peter Bunn, subdivision development committee chairman, said: "It was a million-dollar-an-hour clock tonight."

Most lots sold above their reserve prices, Bunn said. Lots were sold on a one-per-person basis.

The over-all profit to the municipality will be about $500,000. It was estimated earlier the profit would be between $300,000 and $500,000.

"We had to purchase and service the land, of course, and it looks as if it will be a profit to the municipality when everything is finished of about half a million dollars.

"The money goes into the municipal coffers, and will probably be put into short-term investments although it will be up to council to decide what to do with the money," Bunn said.

"In these times of instability, it's a good thing to have something in savings," he said.

Municipal administrator Jim Craven was the auctioneer.

One lot didn't sell and will be re-advertised at a later date on a sealed-bid basis.

It didn't sell, Bunn said, "because there were 26 other lots that were more desirable."

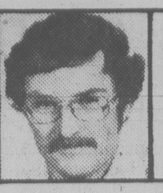
Grouse outlook not good



outdoors
by stewart lang

Some rambling notes along the trail:

Bow and arrow hunters face a mixed chance of success when they take to the field Saturday to bag buck deer, grouse and black bear on most of Vancouver Island.

The regular buck season for rifle hunters opens Sept. 6 and the antlerless season gets underway Nov. 8.

Shotgunners can start to take grouse and ptarmigan in most Island areas Aug. 30 and band-tailed pigeons become fair game Sept. 1.

But, these dates are extremely general and hunters of all types are advised to pick up a copy of the current hunting regulations before setting foot in the bush — there's too many rules to summarize in this space.

Daryll Hebert, the Fish and Wildlife Branch's regional wildlife biologist, said a wet spring has suppressed the grouse population. Chick counts conducted by the branch were down this year.

The deer population, on the other hand, varies widely between the south and north ends of the Island.

Predation by wolves on the north end of the Island has hit deer rather heavily. A recent survey showed fawns constituted a relatively-meagre 10 per cent of the combined population of fawns and mature does — despite a mild winter.

On the south end of the Island, fawns make up 80 per cent of the same segment of the population and in many cases does have produced twins.

Hunters (and fishermen) are reminded that the provincial and federal governments have set up a toll-free hot line to report violations of fish and game laws. The office can be reached by telephoning the operator and asking for Zenith 2235.

Another toll-free number to keep in mind — especially during the early part of the season while the bush is dry — is Zenith 5555. That's the one to use if you come across a forest fire.

The importance of changing line on your fishing reel was brought home in a rather dramatic way while visiting the Northwest Territories during my recent holidays.

Anticipating a little heavier fish than found in local fresh water, I changed the line on my light spin-casting reel from four to eight-pound test.

The change in strength helped no doubt when I managed to land a pike that weighed in the vicinity of 15 pounds and was around a yard long.

Most of the length appeared to be a mouth lined with half-inch teeth — but more on that later.

It's a good idea to change your line at least twice a year in any case.

Monofilament tends to weaken with age and takes on a "set" in tight curls after several months on the reel.

The curls decrease casting distance and accuracy.

Registered shellfish processing plants are now allowed to resume havesting clams from the Strait of Juan de Fuca and Georgia.

Federal fisheries has located no new outbreaks of paralytic shellfish poisoning (commonly called red tide) blooms since June 13 and toxic levels in clam samples from previously infested waters are approaching safe levels.

The commerical operations, however, will be routinely sampled and tested for the poisonous algae.

But, because it is impossible to sample every beach on the affected parts of the coast, the ban on recreational harvesting of bivalves — clams, oysters, mussels and scallops — will continue through the end of summer.

Several more sports fishing closures have been imposed by federal fisheries to protect depleted migrating chinook salmon populations.

Portions of Muchalat Inlet, Tlupana Inlet and Hanna Channel are now closed along with tidal and non-tidal portions of the Gold, Burman, Deserted, Sucwoa, Canton, Conuma, Nesook and Tlupana rivers.

On Aug. 29, the boundaries will be revised and further closures imposed in the Kyuquot Sound, Tahsis Inlet and Zeballos Inlet areas — including tidal and non-tidal portions of the Tashsish, Kaouk, Artlish, Tahsis, Leiner, Zeballos and Little Zeballos rivers.

Specific boundaries of the closures are available in post offices and from federal fisheries officers in Gold River, Zeballos and Tahsis.

Moen's home run big blow

Barry Moen cracked a two-run homer in the first inning Tuesday to spur Mears Realty to a 4-1 decision over Victoria Athletics in a Heywood Men's Softball League playoff game at Heywood Avenue Park.

Mears, who won the best-of-five semi-final 3-1, now faces Knowles Realty in the best-of-seven final which starts tonight.

With one out in the first frame, Dave Rivers drew a base on balls to set the stage for Moen's blast. A sacrifice fly by Bruce Thomson and a single by Dave Rivers in the second inning produced the other two Mears runs.

Greg Gange pitched a five-hitter for the victory.

In Stuffy McGinnis Men's League play at Central Park, Mel Nelson tossed a six-hitter to lead Victoria Athletics to a 5-0 decision over Tally-Ho in the opener of a semi-final series.

Nelson struck out five batters and walked none.

Tim Galavan walked, went to second on a wild pitch and scored on an error to produce what proved to be the winning run in the first inning. Bob Gray supplied two more runs with a fifth-inning single. Athletics and Tally-Ho clash again at 6:30 Thursday.

Elsewhere, Rawlings downed Prairie Inn 10-9 and Sooke dropped Allman's Joy 14-13 in Lower Island Association intermediate "B" women's league semi-finals.

Rawlings and Sooke square off in the opening game of a best-of-three final at 6:30 tonight in Hyacinth Park.

Seymour may be an oaf, but he's star material

SAUK RAPIDS, Minn. (UPI) — Seymour the cat, a feline with a habit of being in the wrong place at the wrong time, is going to Hollywood.

And if Seymour is lucky, he'll be the spokescat for a cat food.

Iris Johnson, Sauk Rapids entered two of her cats in a contest last winter sponsored by Meow Mix to find a new cat to appear on the company's television commercials.

Neither she nor her husband, Earl, thought much about it until a telephone call in July. Mrs. Johnson's cat was one of three nation-wide finalists and she and her husband — and the cat — would be flown to Hollywood for a meow test.

There was only one problem. They had to find a substitute cat.

She had filled out the names of two female barn cats, Hazel and Fehra.

"Hazel has kittens about as often as she can have them," Mrs. Johnson said. "And she's just had a litter. And Fehra is about to pop with one herself."

So they thought of Seymour, owned by the Johnsons' son and daughter-in-law.

The 8-year-old Seymour has one of his front paws in a cast as a result of a confrontation with a trap that broke three toes. He also spent time in the fluff cycle of a clothes dryer.

But Mrs. Johnson noted he won't get pregnant and he's got a much louder meow, — especially when anyone nears his broken toe.

Mortgage rates rising again

By STEVE KERSTETTER

OTTAWA (CP) — Mortgage rates have begun to climb again, much to the dismay of home-buyers, housing contractors and some economic forecasters.

After coming down from their all-time highs in April, mortgages appear to have bottomed out and the going rate for a five-year, closed conventional mortgage has climbed back to as much as 14 per cent from 13 per cent or less.

In the U.S., interest rates on business loans and home mortgages are climbing again, and analysts say further increases are likely in the next several weeks.

The upward spiral was underscored Tuesday when Chase Manhattan Bank raised its prime rate a quarter of a per cent to 11.25 per cent and two major California mortgage lenders raised their rates to 13.5 per cent.

Wall Street analysts predicted other banks would soon join Chase and raise their rates from the prevailing 11-per-cent level.

In Canada it's anyone's guess what will happen to rates between now and the end of the year.

"If you talk to five economists, you get five different answers," says William W. Potter, executive vice-president of the Trust Companies Association of Canada.

While the experts may not agree on their forecasts, they agree on the reason for mortgage rates rebounding this summer: medium- and long-term money is simply more expensive to get.

Institutions such as trust companies and subsidiaries of chartered banks try to match the money they loan out in mortgages with the money they receive from investors buying five-year term deposits.

What's happened in the last two months is that it's been difficult for the institutions to attract these investors without paying them premium rates for their money.

Peter Carter, Royal Bank of Canada assistant general-manager of retail lending and mortgage services, says institutional investors and individuals alike have been reluctant to lock their money into longer-term investments because of a general feeling of uncertainty about the economy.

Carter says the yield on the most recent issue of five-year government of Canada bonds has risen to nearly 12 per cent within the last month, and trust companies and bank affiliates must go even higher than that to attract funds to lend out for mortgages.

The rate for five-year guaranteed investment certificates is running about 12.25 per cent. With an additional 1½ percentage points for operating expenses and profit — the minimum spread the lending institutions like to maintain — the rate for a five-year mortgage would be 13.75 per cent.

The institutions are also being squeezed by long-term deposits obtained last spring when interest rates were high. Even though interest rates generally have dropped, they must continue to pay high returns on those five-year deposits.

Duncan Baillie, vice-president and treasurer of Canada Trustco Mortgage Co., says many investors made their moves when the rates were peaking.

"March and April and most of May were gangbuster months," he says.

All this is little comfort to the person renewing his mortgage this fall or builders facing their worst slump in years.

Higher mortgage rates by definition mean higher monthly payments for consumers. The cost of paying off a $50,000 mortgage amortized over 25 years is $577.97 a month at a rate of 13.75 per cent. Last August, the rate was 11.75 per cent and the monthly payments on the same mortgage would have been $507.23.

Baillie says the demand for mortgage money from Canada Trust is less than it was 12 months ago.

"That's not to say it's dead," he adds. "We're still doing business, but it's not brisk."

The experience of the last year shows fairly conclusively that high interest rates can have a dramatic impact on housing construction.

Housing starts have been running at an annual rate of about 145,000 units. That's roughly three-quarters of last year's rate, and 1979 was certainly no banner year for the industry.

Migrants squeeze housing supply

The Canadian Press

Record migration to British Columbia in the first half of 1980 has created a combination of increased demand for housing in B.C. and continued tight rental markets in Vancouver and Victoria.

The migration will result in increases of between 10 and 15 per cent in house prices and rents for new accommodation this year, says the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corp.

Leading indicators of migration to B.C. such as transfers of family allowance accounts from other parts of Canada and job creation in the province, are sharply higher, meaning demand for housing will continue to grow, the corporation's July-August housing survey shows.

All factors taken together "point to a very buoyant housing market in many areas of the province in the coming months," said Richard McAlary, corporation regional economist.

Net transfers of family allowance accounts into B.C. set a record for the first half of 1980 — 1,857 families as of June 1, up 146 per cent from 1979.

"It would appear that the first half of 1980 will surpass the record-setting pace (of net family allowance accounts transfers) set in 1966 and the very strong first-half performance in 1974," McAlary said.

Metropolitan Vancouver has the highest absorption rate for new housing in Canada although it has the largest production of single detached housing, he said.

"The average amount of time a built-on-speculation, single-detached dwelling remains on the CMHC survey for metropolitan Vancouver is two months.

"The Canadian average for major metropolitan areas is 4.4 months."

A number of other statistics were cited.

Housing starts in B.C.'s urban areas fell 18 per cent, to 2,062 in July from 2,514 in June. But CMHC estimates that housing starts in 1980 will reach 33,000, up from the June estimate of 30,000.

Housing production in metropolitan Vancouver was flat in July.

Statistics Canada surveys show job creation in the Vancouver area was nearly 60,000 new jobs in the past 12 months, "a very strong historical performance and leading cause of housing demand pressure," McAlary said.

The 35,000 household formations estimated by the corporation for the past year, translates into a demand for 40,000 housing units in B.C. between mid-1979 and mid-1980. Since B.C. has about 30,000 housing starts in that period, there will be a pent-up demand for 10,000 units in the next 18 to 24 months.

Police carry away fan during riot at CNE when Alice Cooper failed to show

Angry rock fans go on 'flash riot'

TORONTO (CP) — One of Alice Cooper's most successful shows, Welcome to My Nightmare, turned into reality Tuesday night at the Canadian National Exhibition when the rock star failed to show up for a concert and fans went on the rampage.

"A flash riot," as one CNE official described it, broke out when the crowd of about 14,000 Cooper fans were told that their idol was ill and would not make an appearance.

Ambulance officials at the scene said there were about 10 injuries, the most serious being a broken ankle. One girl was treated after being hit on the head by a flying chair.

Even though it was announced that ticket money would be refunded and another band was available to play, part of the crowd stormed the stage while others threw chairs, bottles and other projectiles.

Police said about 30 people were charged, most booked for assaulting police. Other charges included mischief and causing a disturbance.

As one disgruntled fan put it: "Who wants to get money back? We want to see Cooper."

But they did not see him. Instead they saw a show that Howard Tate, head of CNE's public relations, said he had "never seen anything like in my 19 years with the Ex."

Toronto police announced today that the Canadian Rock Festival, a concert scheduled for tonight at the CNE grandstand, has been cancelled because of the riot.

A drum skin was broken and a few other wires were ripped out, but stage hands said no serious damage was done to the equipment. The outside of the stadium was more heavily damaged, as windows, turnstiles and pay phones took the brunt of the fans' displeasure. A van parked outside the stadium had its windshield and headlights smashed.

Neither Tate nor other officials at the CNE could estimate how much damage was done or how much money would be lost on the concert. The estimates will be compiled later today.

As police worked outside the stadium trying to disperse the crowd, crews were busy on the inside cleaning up the mess. Almost all of the portable chairs set up on the field were uprooted and the ground, usually centrefield for Toronto Blue Jays, was covered with bottles and parts of permanent stadium chairs, which were torn off.

Tate said CNE officials got the final word that Cooper would not appear at 10:10, and the announcement was made five minutes later.

Spokesmen for Cooper did not disclose the rock star's illness, but one stage hand said he was suffering from a high fever.

Tunnel out, bridge in

Science Minister Pat McGeer today rejected the concept of a tunnel under Georgia Strait to connect Vancouver Island with the Mainland and pinned his hopes on a floating bridge.

The minister based his decision on the last of four private consultants' reports on the fixed-link proposal.

Parsons-Brinckerhoff Inc., an international engineering consultant firm based in San Francisco, says a tunnel under the strait would be too expensive and a floating tunnel too unsafe.

Instead, it recommends a floating bridge that would span Georgeia Strait with only one passage for large vessels. This would be situated in a man-made island about two kilometres in diameter.

The shipping lane would consist of a canal through the centre of this island.

While ships moved north and south through the canal, vehicle traffic would move east-west via a short tunnel through the seabed beneath the canal.

McGeer said this would be much safer than the submersible bridge section proposed as a shipping lane in an earlier study. It also would be much more expensive.

The price tag on the Parsons-Brinckerhoff concept is $3 billion to $4 billion, compared to the $2 billion estimate for the floating bridge proposal submitted by Willis, Cunliffe, Tait.

McGeer gives greater weight to the Parsons-Brinckerhoff study because the firm is actively involved in designing and building the new Hood Canal floating bridge.

Air crash toll rises to 301

JEDDAH, Saudi Arabia (Reuter) — The death toll from a fire which destroyed a Saudi Arabian jetliner at Riyadh airport rose to 301 Wednesday night with the discovery of more bodies in the charred shell of the aircraft, airport officials said.

This made it the second-worst-ever aviation disaster involving a single aircraft.

All the passengers and crew of the Lockheed L-1011 Tristar burned to death behind the jammed doors of the airliner Tuesday night after it made an emergency landing at Riyadh on a flight to Jeddah which began in Karachi, Pakistan.

Officials said the passengers were mostly Saudis and Pakistanis, but included three Britons living in

10 of 12 subcompacts fail crash test; death warning

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — U.S. government crash tests show that major safety improvements are necessary in small cars to prevent sharp increases in the highway death toll as Americans buy more sub-compacts to reduce fuel costs.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration reported Tuesday that only two of 12 models of 1980 subcompact cars passed its tests.

"Consumers need to know that when they switch to a small car to double the fuel economy, they may be doubling their risk of death in a crash — and that there are steps that can be taken to reduce the risk," said Joan Claybrook, administrator of the safety agency.

She was especially critical of Japanese models, and particularly cited two Toyota cars, the Tercel and the Celica, which she said would have to be redesigned structurally in order to pass the frontal crash test.

Japanese automakers "have just not put their attention" into strengthening vehicle structure, she said.

The NHTSA tested one domestic and 11 foreign car models by crashing them at 55 km/h into a fixed barrier with two dummies in the front seat wearing safety belts. A car failed the test when one of the test dummies was judged to have suffered a serious or fatal injury.

Only the Chevrolet Chevette, equipped with a three-point automatic belt system that encloses the occupant as he enters the car, and the Fiat Strada, which has conventional belts, passed the test. None of the highly popular Japanese models passed the tests.

The cars that failed the latest round of tests were the Honda Civic, Toyota Corolla, Toyota Tercel, Datsun 310, Subaru GLF and Honda Prelude, all mini-compacts weighing up to 2,150 pounds. Also

Change on helmets in works

An amendment to the Motor Vehicle Act to make use of motorcycle helmets mandatory in B.C. was introduced in the legislature Tuesday by Transport Minister Alex Fraser.

It's expected the amendment will become law within a week.

The amendment — which the NDP has agreed to support — will fix a section of the act which a provincial court judge ruled last week does not give the superintendent of motor vehicles authority to make helmet use mandatory.

Under the amendment, the section rejected by the judge will be replaced by one which states motorcyclists wear a safety helmet, but does not mention the superintendent.

Oak Bay lots hit $85,000

Oak Bay Tuesday night auctioned 26 choice lots at $61,000 to $85,000 each to reap $1,865,500 for municipal coffers.

About 150 people took about two hours to buy up the serviced, single-family lots which are bounded by Foul Bay, Lansdowne and Henderson near Camosun College.

Ald. Peter Bunn, subdivision development committee chairman, said: "It was a million-dollar-an-hour clock tonight."

Most lots sold above their reserve prices, Bunn said. Lots were sold on a one-per-person basis.

The over-all profit to the municipality will be about $500,000. It was estimated earlier the profit would be between $300,000 and $500,000.

"We had to purchase and service the land, of course, and it looks as if it will be a profit to the municipality when everything is finished of about half a million dollars.

"The money goes into the municipal coffers, and will probably be put into short-term investments although it will be up to council to decide what to do with the money," Bunn said.

"In these times of instability, it's a good thing to have something in savings," he said.

Municipal administrator Jim Craven was the auctioneer.

One lot didn't sell and will be re-advertised at a later date on a sealed-bid basis.

It didn't sell, Bunn said, "because there were 26 other lots that were more desirable."

A very Special grade One

Grade 1 boys at St. Michaels University Junior School enjoy:

1) A FULL DAY: regular timetable from 9 a.m. - 3 p.m., followed by an optional extra hour of supervised reading, study and other activities, from 3-4 p.m. (A programme also offered to Grades 2 and 3)
2) DAILY FRENCH — with an expert.
3) DAILY SPORTS: small boys need lots of exercise — and if they return home at the end of the day happy, and pleasantly tired, their mothers will stay young longer.
4) BRIGHT COMPANY: every pupil entering St. Michaels University School takes an entrance test, and promising boys may enter Grade 1 aged five and a half.

Most important of all, boys admitted in Grade 1 gain a coveted place on the St. Michaels University School academic ladder. In many of the higher grades it is becoming harder each year, because of growing demand, to win a place at the School.

For information, call 592-2411, or write: John Schaffter, M.A., Headmaster, St. Michaels University School, 3400 Richmond Road, Victoria, B.C. V8P 4P5.
